

MUNICIPAL COURT OF THE LOS ANGELES JUDICIAL DISTRICT
COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES, STATE OF CALIFORNIA

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA, )
 )
Plaintiff, ) Case No.
 )
-v- ) MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND ) AUTHORITIES IN SUPPORT OF FABIAN FARNIA, et al., ) DEMURRER TO COMPLAINT
 )
Defendants. )
 )
 )
 )
 )
 )
 )
 )
 )

Submitted by:

Counsel:

Co-Counsel:

LAW OFFICES OF THOMAS F. COLEMAN
1800 North Highland Avenue
Suite 106
Los Angeles, California 90028
(213) 464-6666

LAW OFFICES OF JAY M. KOHORN
1800 North Highland Avenue
Suite 106
Los Angeles, California 90028
(213) 464-6666

Associated Counsel:

ARTHUR C. WARNER
National Committee for Sexual Civil Liberties
18 Ober Road
Princeton, New Jersey 08540
(609) 924-1950

DEBORAH FRANK
8276-1/2 Santa Monica Boulevard
Los Angeles, California 90046
(213) 656-2275

PETER A. ROSS
6255 Sunset Boulevard
20th Floor
Los Angeles, California 90028
(213) 462-1114

ARNOLD JOHNSON
1310 Wilshire Boulevard
Los Angeles, California 90028
(213) 483-3104

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The undersigned would like to give special recognition to associated attorneys and others who assisted with the research, writing, and preparation of this memorandum.

Special thanks go to Dr. Arthur C. Warner of Princeton, New Jersey (Co-Chairman of the National Committee for Sexual Civil Liberties) for his contributions, particularly those dealing with the historical background of the prostitution laws and with the international status of prostitution regulation.

We wish to note the time spent in conferences, research, and in writing of portions of the brief done by attorneys Debbie Frank, Peter A. Ross, Arnold Johnson, and Scott Jacobs.

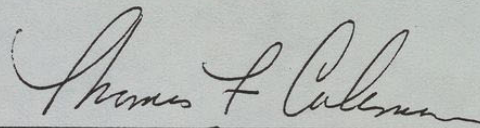

Since our approach was multifaceted and multidisciplinary, we are particularly grateful to sociologist Michael Ben-Levi and sex therapist Barbara M. Roberts for help in broadening our analysis and for the special assistance they gave to other members of the group with respect to background material and documentation.

We wish to mention the valued efforts of law student Matt St. George for his role in the researching of material for this brief.

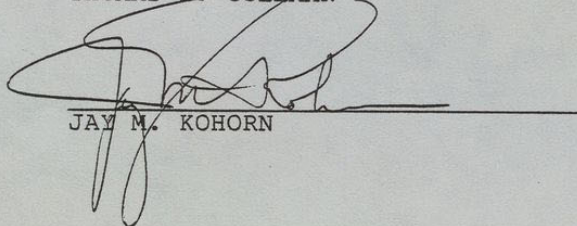

Peter Nicholas spent innumerable hours researching and reproducing copies of the pertinent prostitution laws in each of the 50 states. This will ultimately be transposed into a legal survey and will be submitted as a separate exhibit. We are all in Peter's debt for his attention to detail, his initiative, and his skills in organizing material.

In fine, we wish to express our appreciation to Martin Butel for his patience, perseverance, and cooperative spirit. Mr. Butel proofread, assisted in editing, and typed the finished product--this brief. As Dr. Warner set the tone of the brief by his contributions, so Martin Butel helped to maintain the momentum, thus insuring the same high standards throughout the brief.

Los Angeles, California
February 18, 1980

THOMAS F. COLEMAN

JAY M. KOHORN

TABLE OF CONTENTS

		Page
I	INTRODUCTION	1
	Regulation in England	2
	International Status of Prostitution Laws	6
	Prohibition in American Jurisdictions	10
	Some General Considerations Regarding California Law	14
	Public -v- Private Aspects of Prostitution	22
II	STATUTORY REGULATION OF PROSTITUTION IN CALIFORNIA	25
III	LEGISLATIVE HISTORY AND JUDICIAL INTERPRETATION OF SECTION 647(b) AS IT PERTAINS TO PROSTITUTION	27
	The 1961 Statute and its Construction	29
	The 1965 Amendment	32
	The 1969 Amendment and Present Wording	34
	California Supreme Court Review of Section 647(b)	34
	Summary of Present Scope and Interpretation of Section 647, Subdivision (b)	41
IV	UNDERLYING CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY CONSIDERATIONS	42
	Legislative Recognition of a Right to Sexual Privacy	43
	Recognition of Sexual Privacy by the Federal Judiciary	44
	State Court Decisions and State Constitutions	49
	California's Recognition of Sexual Privacy	57
V	LEGAL ISSUES PRESENTED	65
VI	ISSUE 1 PRIVATE SEXUAL CONDUCT BETWEEN CONSENTING ADULTS IS PROTECTED BY THE RIGHT TO PRIVACY UNDER THE STATE AND FEDERAL CONSTITUTIONS	67
VII	ISSUE 2 REGULATION OF PRIVATE SEXUAL CONDUCT SHOULD BE STRICTLY SCRUTINIZED BY THE COURTS AND SHOULD BE VOIDED ABSENT A SHOWING THAT THERE IS A COMPELLING STATE INTEREST FOR THEIR RETENTION	69

TABLE OF CONTENTS (Continued)

	Page
VIII	ISSUE 3
	THE ENGAGING PORTION OF SECTION 647(b) IS OVERBROAD AND VIOLATES THE RIGHT TO PRIVACY BECAUSE IT TOTALLY PROHIBITS SEXUAL CONDUCT MERELY BECAUSE MONEY OR OTHER CONSIDERATION IS INVOLVED
	71
	Procreational Sex Should be Protected
	72
	Therapeutic Sex for a Consideration Should be Constitutionally Protected 73
	Recreational Sex for Money Should Not be Prohibited
	78
IX	ISSUE 4
	SECTION 647(b) VIOLATES DUE PROCESS AS WELL AS THE RIGHT TO PRIVACY BECAUSE IT INFRINGES ON THE RIGHT OF INDIVIDUALS TO PRIVATELY OFFER MONEY IN ORDER TO RECEIVE THE AMOUNT OR KIND OF SEXUAL SERVICES THEY DESIRE 82
X	ISSUE 5
	THERE IS NO COMPELLING STATE INTEREST OR EVEN RATIONAL BASIS FOR A TOTAL PROHIBITION OF PRIVATE SEXUAL CONDUCT MERELY BECAUSE MONEY OR OTHER CONSIDERATION IS OFFERED
	88
	An Examination of the "Harms" Excerpted from U.S. v. Moses
	91
XI	ISSUE 6
	SECTION 647(b) IS UNCONSTITUTIONALLY VAGUE BECAUSE THE DEFINITION OF THE CRIME RESTS ON THE MEANING OF SUCH TERMS AS "ANY LEWD ACT" AND "OR OTHER CONSIDERATION" 105
XII	ISSUE 7
	THE SOLICITATION PORTION OF SECTION 647(b) VIOLATES THE FREE SPEECH PROTECTIONS OF THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE FEDERAL CONSTITUTION AND ARTICLE I, SECTION 2 OF THE CALIFORNIA CONSTITUTION
	107
XIII	CONCLUSION
	115
	NOTES
	i

EXHIBIT A:

Thomas F. Coleman, Susan Louise Wendt, and Rand Schrader, Enforcement of Section 647(b) of the California Penal Code by the Los Angeles Police Department: Prostitution and the Police (National Committee for Sexual Civil Liberties, Los Angeles, 1973).

EXHIBIT B:

Fournier v. Lopez, 1st Cal. District Court of Appeal, Civil
No. 43979 (Sup. Ct. No. 170391). Filed May 2, 1979.

EXHIBIT C:

M. Anne Jennings, "The Victim as Criminal: A Consideration of California's Prostitution Law," California Law Review,
Vol. 64 (1976), pp. 1235-1284.

EXHIBIT D:

Committee on Homosexual Offences and Prostitution, Report, command paper 247 (Home Office, London, 1957).

EXHIBIT E:

David A.J. Richards, "Unnatural Acts and the Constitutional Right to Privacy: A Moral Theory," Fordham Law Review,
Vol. 45 (1977), pp. 1280-1348.

EXHIBIT F:

In re P., 400 N.Y.S.2d 455 (1977).

EXHIBIT G:

Roger B. Coven, "The Constitutional Right of Sexual Privacy:
State v. Saunders, 75 N.J. 200, 381 A.2d 333 (1977)," Suffolk
University Law Review, Vol. XII (1978), pp. 1312-1328.

EXHIBIT H:

"Privacy and Prostitution: Constitutional Implications of State v. Pilcher," Iowa Law Review, Vol. 63
(1977), pp. 248-265.

EXHIBIT I:

Madeline F. Caughey, "The Principle of Harm and its Application to Laws Criminalizing Prostitution," Denver Law Journal,
Vol. 51 (1974), pp. 235-262.

EXHIBIT J:

Charles Rosenblatt & Barbara J. Pariente, "The Prostitution of the Criminal Law," The American Criminal Law Review, Vol. 11
(1973), pp. 373-427.

1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19
20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28

I

INTRODUCTION

This brief takes as its starting point the proposition put forward twenty-two years ago by the British Committee on Homosexual Offences and Prostitution in answer to the question, "What acts ought to be punished by the State?" That Committee, under the chairmanship of Sir John Wolfenden, concluded that "the function of the criminal law" in matters of sexual conduct "is to preserve public order and decency, to protect the citizen from what is offensive or injurious, and to provide sufficient safeguards against exploitation and corruption of others, particularly those who are specially vulnerable because they are young, weak in body or mind, inexperienced, or in a state of special physical, official or economic dependence."<sup>1/</sup> Ordinarily questions such as "What acts ought to be punished by the State?" are addressed to legislatures, and, in the case of the Report of the Wolfenden Committee, that question was addressed to Parliament. But the existence of written constitutions in the United States -- both Federal and state -- and the requirement that all laws be in conformity with those constitutions mean that, in this country, questions such as the one just posed must frequently be addressed to the judiciary as well as to the legislature. Accordingly, much of what follows will be devoted to a discussion of the scope of Section 647(b) of the California Penal Code. And, for this purpose, it becomes necessary to begin by tracing briefly the historical background leading to the enactment of Section 647(b) in its present form.

////

///

1 I(a)

2 Regulation in England

3 It comes as no surprise to learn that the early Church
4 fathers -- consistent with their view that the only licit form of 5 sexual relations was that which is performed within the state of 6 marriage leading to reproduction -- severely condemned
7 prostitution, which, like all other forms of extra-marital sex,
8 was considered shameful and grossly immoral. What may surprise
9 many persons, however, is to learn that St. Augustine and St.
10 Thomas Aquinas both held that prostitution should be legally
11 tolerated for the somewhat odd reason that it was considered to be 12 a protection to the marriage state. Through the availability of 13 prostitution, they argued, married or single men would not be 14 tempted to seduce other men's wives or to have sexual relations
15 with virgins who were potential brides.<sup>2/</sup> This view pervaded 16 medieval thinking on the subject, with the result that 17 prostitution was tolerated throughout the medieval period.

18 This toleration ended with the Protestant Reformation. Like
19 Augustine and Thomas Aquinas before them, Luther and Calvin
20 regarded prostitution with abhorrence and those who engaged in it
21 as the worst of sinners.<sup>3/</sup> Both of them urged its legal 22 suppression. This position was even more strongly held by the 23 Puritan elements within Calvinism, elements which deeply
24 influenced the sexual attitudes of both England and her colonies.
25 These Puritan attitudes found their most congenial home in the 26 English colonies in the New World. In England itself, however,
27 the common law has never known the crime of prostitution, if only 28 because, until the Reformation, all sexual crimes except

1 rape -- such as bigamy, incest, sodomy, adultery, and fornication,
2 were ecclesiastical offences, cognizable in the courts
3 Christian.<sup>4/</sup> After the Reformation, most -- but not all -- of 4 these offences were secularized and subsumed under the royal
5 jurisdiction. Fornication, however, never became a secular
6 offence, and, since there never had been a specific ecclesiastical
7 crime of prostitution distinct from fornication, no secular crime
8 of prostitution was ever created. This is reflected in English
9 law today, which was perhaps best summarized by the Wolfenden
10 Committee in 1957 in the course of explaining the contemporary 11 English attitude toward prostitution. The Committee stated:

12           Prostitution in itself is not, in this country, an 13           offence against the criminal law. Some of the 14           activities of prostitutes are, and so are the activities 15           of some others who are concerned in the activities of 16           prostitutes. But it is not illegal for a women to 17           "offer her body to indiscriminate lewdness for hire,"
18           provided that she does not, in the course of doing so,
19           commit any one of the specific acts which would bring 20           her within the ambit of the law. Nor, it seems to us, 21           can any case be sustained for attempting to make 22           prostitution in itself illegal. . . .

23           Prostitution is a social fact deplorable in the 24           eyes of moralists, sociologists and, we believe, the 25           great majority of ordinary people. But it has persisted 26           in many civilisations throughout many centuries, and the 27           failure of attempts to stamp it out by repressive
28           legislation shows that it cannot be eradicated through

1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19
20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28

the agency of the criminal law. . . .

It follows that there are limits to the degree of discouragement which the criminal law can properly exercise towards a woman who has deliberately decided to live her life in this way, or a man who has deliberately chosen to use her services. The criminal law, as the Street Offences Committee finally pointed out, "is not concerned with private morals or with ethical sanctions."<sup>5/</sup>

Thus, still today, prostitution itself is not a crime in England. Likewise, sexual solicitations, even for prostitution, in other than public places, are not made criminal. However, there exists in England a veritable mountain of statutes prohibiting almost all aspects of prostitution, a mass of laws which covers a huge legal patchwork. At least twenty such enactments are referred to in the footnotes of the Wolfenden Report, reflecting a time span of more than six centuries, extending from the Justices of the Peace Act of 1361 to the England and Wales: Sexual Offences Act of 1956, passed only the year before the appearance of the Wolfenden Committee's Report. All these laws continue to be employed in the enforcement of the penal sanctions against some aspect of prostitution.<sup>6/</sup> Despite this jumble, it is possible to place all these laws under one of the following four well-defined heads. (In each instance, the conduct listed below constitutes a criminal offence.):

1. Loitering or soliciting by any common prostitute or night-walker in any public place for the purpose of prostitution.<sup>7/</sup>

1	2.	Living on the earnings of prostitution. <sup>8/</sup>
2	3.	Procuration, i.e. , procuring a woman for the
3		purpose of prostitution. <sup>9/</sup>
4	4.	Maintaining a brothel. <sup>10/</sup>
5	////		///
6	////		///
7	////		///
8	////		///
9	////		///
10	////		///
11	////		///
12	////		///
13	////		///
14	////		///
15	////		///
16	////		///
17	////		///
18	////		///
19	////		///
20	////		///
21	////		///
22	////		///
23	////		///
24	////		///
25	////		///
26	////		///
27	////		///
28	////		///

1 I(b)

2 International Status of Prostitution Laws

3 Except for those American jurisdictions which, like
4 California, punish prostitution itself, the prostitution laws of 5 no modern state go beyond the four general areas just listed.
6 Some of them, in fact, do not cover them all. Much of this,
7 particularly in continental Europe, is due to the wide influence
8 of the Code Napoleon. Thus the French Penal Code punishes (1)
9 pimping; (2) participating in "the profits of prostitution of 10 others"; (3) living on the earnings of an "habitual prostitute"; 11 (4) inducing someone to become a prostitute; and (5) acting "as an 12 intermediary . . . between persons practicing prostitution."<sup>11/</sup>
13 It also punishes anyone who "maintains a house of 14 prostitution."<sup>12/</sup> Like a number of others, the French Code does
15 not punish soliciting for purposes of prostitution. The German
16 Penal Code, on the other hand, punishes sexual solicitations of 17 all kinds, whether for prostitution or for non-commercial
18 purposes, if done "publicly, in an ostentatious manner, or in a 19 manner likely to disturb the community or other individuals."<sup>13/</sup> 20 It also punishes anyone who, acting "for gain," aids "or abets the 21 commission of lewd acts by others by acting as intermediary or by 22 affording or providing the opportunity therefor (pandering)" as 23 well as anyone "who maintains or conducts a bordello."<sup>14/</sup>
24 Finally, it punishes any male who derives "his livelihood" from 25 prostitution or who "for gain . . . promotes . . .
26 prostitution."<sup>15/</sup> Austria, under the rubric of "pandering," 27 punishes those "who provide prostitutes with regular lodging," or 28 "who make a business of procuring" prostitutes, or who "permit

1 themselves to be intermediators in illicit undertakings of this
2 nature."<sup>16/</sup> Like the French Code, the Austrian does not proscribe
3 soliciting for purposes of prostitution. The Greek Code punishes
4 anyone "who, as his profession, and for financial gain, induces
5 females to commit prostitution" as well as any "male person who
6 derives his livelihood wholly or partially from the exploitation
7 of the income of a female prostitute."<sup>17/</sup> The Norwegian Code
8 appears to be one of the most liberal. A provision similar to 9 those which prohibit "procuring" in other jurisdictions punishes
10 "anybody who misleads another to make a living by prostitution, or 11 who is accessory to such misleading."<sup>18/</sup> Another section punishes 12 "anybody who furthers the indecent relations of others out of 13 greed or who exploits such relations out of greed."<sup>19/</sup> Finally, 14 in a surprising provision, the same code punishes "anybody who 15 tries to restrain a person living by prostitution from ceasing
16 therewith, or is accessory thereto."<sup>20/</sup>

17 As one moves away from Europe, one finds the criminal 18 sanctions involving some aspect of prostitution to be fewer and 19 less comprehensive. Thus Japan, in A Preparatory Draft for the 20 Revised Penal Code, planned to punish only "pandering," which it 21 defined as conduct whereby anyone "for purposes of gain induces a 22 woman not of a promiscuous character to have sexual 23 intercourse."<sup>21/</sup> An almost identical provision, also denominated 24 "pandering," comprises the sole provision on the subject of 25 prostitution in the Korean Penal Code.<sup>22/</sup> In Argentina it appears 26 that the only crime is promoting prostitution in instances where 27 "the victim" is under twenty-two years of age, unless the 28 "perpetrator is an ascendant, husband, brother, tutor or person

1 entrusted with the education or care of the victim," in which case
2 the age of the victim is of no consequence.<sup>23/</sup> The Turkish Code
3 is similar. Procuring for purposes of prostitution is ordinarily 4 a crime only when the girl is a virgin or is under the age of 5 twenty-one.<sup>24/</sup> However, if the woman is "enticed into 6 prostitution by her husband, ascendant, ascendant by affinity,
7 brother or sister," her age is no longer a factor, and it is a
8 crime even if the woman has reached her majority.<sup>25/</sup>

9 In Canada prostitution is not, in itself, criminal.
10 Procuring, keeping a bawdy house, and certain forms of public
11 solicitation are punishable offenses.<sup>26/</sup> The statute regulating
12 public solicitation reads "Every person who solicits in a public
13 place for the purpose of prostitution is guilty of an offense
14 punishable on summary conviction."<sup>27/</sup> With respect to the 15 definition and scope of public solicitation, the Canadian courts
16 have held that (1) an undercover police officer's car, where the 17 soliciting allegedly took place, was not a "public place" within 18 the meaning of this section, and (2) to constitute this offense
19 there must not only be a demonstration by the accused of an 20 intention to make herself available for prostitution, but conduct
21 which is pressing or persistent.<sup>28/</sup>

22 One could go on, but to do so would merely pile Pelion on 23 Ossa. The same would be true if one were to list those countries,
24 such as Italy, which appear to have no criminal sanctions against 25 any aspects of prostitution. The only purpose of this excursus
26 into the laws of foreign countries has been to show which aspects 27 of prostitution are deemed appropriate objects of legal 28 proscription in the eyes of most of the world. There seem to be

1 two common threads running through all of these foreign laws. One
2 is that, although they punish some or all of the several aspects
3 of prostitution, the conduct itself remains legal. The other is 4 that they do not punish discrete solicitations in private.

5	////	///
6	////	///
7	////	///
8	////	///
9	////	///
10	////	///
11	////	///
12	////	///
13	////	///
14	////	///
15	////	///
16	////	///
17	////	///
18	////	///
19	////	///
20	////	///
21	////	///
22	////	///
23	////	///
24	////	///
25	////	///
26	////	///
27	////	///
28	////	///

1 I(c)

2 Prohibition in American Jurisdictions

3 The system of punishing some aspects of prostitution, while 4 not punishing private sexual conduct for a fee or discrete
5 solicitations in private for such conduct, is followed by 6 some -- though not a majority of American jurisdictions. Most 7 American states make prostitution itself a crime as well as all
8 its ancillary aspects.

9 Why do most jurisdictions in this country prohibit sexual 10 relations in private merely because a fee is involved? Why are 11 private and discreet solicitations to commit such conduct made
12 criminal? Why is American jurisprudence so out of tune with much 13 of the world in this respect? The answer is quite simple -- our 14 politicians have been swayed by public demand rather than by logic
15 and reason. The drafters of the Hawaii Penal Code, as revised in 16 1972, acknowledged this as the reason in their Commentary on 17 Section 712-1200 of that code which prohibits soliciting or 18 engaging in sexual intercourse for a fee:

19 History has proven that prostitution is not going 20 to be abolished either by penal legislation nor the 21 imposition of criminal sanctions through the vigorous 22 enforcement of such legislation. Yet the trend of 23 modern thought on prostitution in this country is that 24 "public policy" demands that the criminal law go on 25 record against prostitution. Defining this "public
26 policy" is a difficult task. Perhaps it more correctly
27 ought to be considered and termed "public demand" -- a 28 widespread community attitude which the penal law must

1 take into account regardless of the questional
2 rationales upon which it is based.

3 A number of reasons have been advanced for the 4 suppression of prostitution, the most often repeated of 5 which are: "the prevention of disease, the protection
6 of innocent girls from exploitation, and the danger that
7 more sinister activities may be financed by the gains
8 from prostitution." These reasons are not convincing.
9 Venereal disease is not prevented by laws attempting to 10 suppress prostitution. If exploitation were a 11 significant factor, the offense could be dealt with 12 solely in terms of coercion. Legalizing prostitution
13 would decrease the prostitute's dependence upon and 14 connection with the criminal underworld and might 15 decrease the danger that "organized crime" might be 16 financed in part by criminally controlled prostitution.

17 Our study of public attitude in this area revealed
18 the widespread belief among those interviewed that 19 prostitution should be suppressed entirely or that it
20 should be so restricted as not to offend those members
21 of society who do not wish to consort with prostitutes
22 or to be affronted by them. Making prostitution a
23 criminal offense is one method of controlling the scope
24 of prostitution and thereby protecting those segments of 25 society which are offended by its open existence. This 26 "abolitionist" approach is not without its vociferous
27 detractors. There are those that contend that the only 28 honest and workable approach to the problem is to

1           legalize prostitution and confine it to certain
2           localities within a given community. While such a
3           proposal may exhibit foresight and practicality, the 4           fact remains that a large segment of society is not
5           presently willing to accept such a liberal approach.
6           Recognizing this fact and the need for public order, the 7           Code makes prostitution and its associate enterprises
8           criminal offenses.

9           Hence most of the legal distinctions between the states in 10          the area of prostitution do not revolve around the question 11          whether or not they prohibit prostitution itself but on how they 12          define the term. Most states define "prostitution" as consisting 13          of sexual relations "for hire" or "for a fee." Sometimes variant
14          language is employed, but with essentially the same meaning. New 15          Jersey, for example, punishes any person who "is an inmate of a 16          house of prostitution or otherwise engages in sexual activity as a
17          business." (Emphasis added.) Soliciting for purposes of 18          prostitution is defined as soliciting "another person in or within 19          view of any public place for the purpose of being hired to engage 20          in sexual activity."<sup>29/</sup> California's definition of prostitution
21          is in sharp contrast to the above. Section 647(b) of its Penal 22          Code defines prostitution so as to include "any lewd act between 23          persons for money or other consideration." Aside from the fact 24          that no other state appears to use the word "consideration" in its 25          definition of prostitution, this all-embracing language seems to 26          fly in the face of the historical and traditional concept of 27          prostitution. As Professor David Richards has pointed out in his 28          magisterial article on the subject, "the traditional concern for

1 for prostitution was peculiarly associated with female
2 sexuality -- more particularly, with attitudes toward promiscuous
3 unchastity in women -- apart from the commercial aspects."<sup>30/</sup> The 4 Model Penal Code refers to "16 states whose statutes define
5 prostitution to include promiscuous intercourse without hire."<sup>31/</sup>
6 By contrast, Section 647(b) makes money or consideration the 7 determining element in its definition of prostitution, and 8 therefor the determinant of criminality. Thus the provision is 9 not only at odds with the traditional concept of prostitution, but 10 its criminal reach extends beyond that found in all other American 11 jurisdictions except Missouri.

12	////	///
13	////	///
14	////	///
15	////	///
16	////	///
17	////	///
18	////	///
19	////	///
20	////	///
21	////	///
22	////	///
23	////	///
24	////	///
25	////	///
26	////	///
27	////	///
28	////	///

1 I(d)

2 Some General Considerations

3 Regarding California Law

4 At this juncture it must be stated unequivocally that the 5 question whether or not prostitution should be legally prohibited
6 in California or in any other American state is NOT the subject of 7 this brief. Such questions are properly addressed to 8 legislatures, not to courts of law. What is at issue here are 9 matters quite different, involving the scope and constitutionality
10 of Section 647(b) and its definition of the term "prostitution."
11 Here it should be noted that there is another aspect of Section 12 647(b) which must be examined, and that is the absence of any 13 limit in point of time or place delineating the range of the 14 provision's prohibitions, for the section punishes soliciting or 15 engaging "in any act of prostitution" no matter where or under 16 what circumstances it takes place. In practical terms, this means 17 that a private solicitation between two adults to engage in sexual 18 relations within the privacy of their own homes -- conduct which 19 is otherwise entirely legal -- is made criminal by the mere fact 20 that some consideration is offered or requested. What must now be 21 considered is whether, within the particular context of the 22 Constitution of California and enactments by the California
23 Legislature, the proscription of such conduct is constitutionally 24 permissible. However, before considering these questions, it is 25 pertinent to ask what legitimate state interests are served by 26 punishing conduct so private, intimate and harmless, simply 27 because consideration is involved. While weighty reasons have 28 been adduced for prohibiting soliciting or engaging in

1 prostitution in its traditional sense, no one seems to have given
2 much thought to the legal and social consequences which flow from 3 a statute on the order of Section 647(b) that goes far beyond the 4 usual prostitution law.

5         The activities which prostitution statutes in this country
6 have customarily attempted to suppress involve those aspects of 7 commercial sexual relations that constitute a business -- a
8 business involving brothels, madams, pimps, and other types of 9 procurers. Like any business, this involves the opening of 10 business establishments, the hiring of employees (the 11 prostitutes), the the solicitation of customers. The prostitution 12 business is such, however, that it not infrequently involves the 13 exploitation of its employees, acts of fraud or violence against 14 its customers, involvement in other crimes, and the spread of 15 venereal disease. Consequently, prostitution statutes have 16 traditionally attempted to prohibit prostitution as a business in 17 whatever form the business manifests itself -- whether through 18 pimping, through pandering, through living on the earnings of 19 prostitution, or through the maintenance of a brothel.
20 Similarly, the traditional type of prostitution law attempts to 21 prohibit the accosting in public of unwilling customers by 22 aggressive strumpets. It would appear, however, that to extend 23 the definition of prostitution, as does Section 647(b), so as to 24 include intimate private sexual acts between persons above the 25 sexual age of consent merely because some form of consideration is 26 involved is to extend the law's ambit far beyond the point where 27 it can reasonably claim to serve any valid state purpose, to say
28 nothing of the constitutional issues which such an extension

1 raises. These constitutional issues will be dealt with below, but 2 some observations in this connection are relevant here.

3 In 1972 the voters of this State added Article I, Section 1
4 to the Constitution of California, strongly protecting the right
5 of privacy. Subsequent court decisions have made it abundantly
6 clear that this constitutional right of privacy is not limited to 7 conduct of a non-commercial character.<sup>32/</sup> Four years later, in 8 1976, the Consenting Adults Statute -- the so-called Brown
9 Act -- took effect in this state, establishing a clear state
10 policy of non-interference by the criminal law in the private 11 sexual conduct of consenting adults.<sup>33/</sup> Then, in 1979, the 12 California Supreme Court handed down its decision in Pryor v.
13 Municipal Court, substantially reshaping the meaning of Section
14 647(a), the section immediately preceding Section 647(b) in the 15 Penal Code.<sup>34/</sup> In this case the Supreme Court held that even sex
16 in public may not be constitutionally proscribed absent a showing 17 that someone is present who might be offended. This is not to 18 contend that the Brown Act was enacted or that the Pryor case was 19 decided with prostitution in mind. Clearly, this was not the 20 case. What is contended is that this act and this case laid down
21 certain general principles which have a substantial impact over 22 and beyond the particular statutory provisions with which they 23 were concerned. What this means is that a judicial reappraisal of 24 Section 647(b) has become necessary. This re-examination need not 25 involve Section 647(b) in its entirety, but only certain aspects.
26 One example of the need for reappraisal can serve as surrogate for 27 others. Prior to the Brown Act, much of the conduct penalized by 28 Section 647(b) was already criminal under other provisions of the

1 California Penal Code.<sup>35/</sup> Now none of the private conduct between 2 consenting adults which Section 647(b) punishes is criminal for 3 any reason except that consideration is involved. The gravamen of 4 much of these pages is that the mere existence of consideration,
5 in and by itself, does not provide legitimate ground for 6 criminalization by the state.

7 Consideration, as we all know, need not take the form of an 8 actual cash flow, and Section 647(b) recognizes this by referring 9 to "money or other consideration." Thus consideration can extend 10 all the way from large sums of cash to the smallest token of 11 personal affection or favor, and it can involve marital as well as 12 non-marital relationships. As professor David Richards has 13 observed, "There may be a commercial element to some marital 14 sexual relations, . . . and there is not always a sharp line,
15 perhaps, between the dinners and entertainment expenses in now
16 conventional pre-marital sexual relations and the more formalized
17 business transactions of the prostitute."<sup>36/</sup> Richards 18 appropriately calls attention to "the continuity of the motives of 19 conventional women in marrying with those of a prostitute," and 20 points out that this was "one of Mrs. Warren's main points in her
21 defense of her profession to her daughter."<sup>37/</sup> Thus Section 22 647(b) makes vulnerable to criminal sanctions anyone who performs 23 a small favor for his or her sexual partner in -- presumably -- 24 non-marital sexual situations.

25 Here one must be struck by the looseness of the language
26 which Section 647(b) employs, for a literal reading of its 27 provisions would require the prosecution of husbands and wives
28 under appropriate circumstances. It is no answer to point out

1 that everyone knows the Legislature never intended to bring
2 married couples within the purview of Section 647(b). That the 3 Legislature is quite capable of making its intentions known with 4 respect to such matters as spousal exemptions to particular
5 statutes is demonstrated by the specific inclusion of such an
6 exemption in the California rape law, an exemption which was only 7 this year removed by specific amendatory legislation.<sup>38/</sup> In 8 truth, because it makes money or consideration the "triggering"
9 factor in determining criminality, Section 647(b) leads to an 10 absurdity, for, if one member of a sexual couple were to agree to 11 engage in one form of sexual activity in return for his or her
12 sexual partner's engaging in a different form of sexual activity, 13 the second form of activity can be considered consideration for 14 the first. This is only one of numerous ridiculous and horrendous
15 results inherent in Section 647(b). Its language is so broad and 16 loose that it severely impinges on the fundamental rights of 17 persons to engage in activities which, because they are so private 18 and intimate in character, have always been deemed beyond the 19 reach of the criminal law. Numerous examples come to mind. Take, 20 for instance, the kind of arrangement which is not unknown among 21 certain ethnic groups, whereby a married couple, one of whose 22 members is infertile, requests a third person to have a baby by 23 the fertile member or by a willing, fertile outsider, so that the 24 couple can adopt it. Under Section 647(b), the couple could be 25 prosecuted as prostitutes.<sup>39/</sup> Again, consider the case of 26 hitch-hikers. It is a well-recognized sociological fact that much 27 of the hitch-hiking, which is an endemic characteristic of our 28 automobile age, has wide-spread sexual overtones. These

1 frequently culminate in sexual relations -- heterosexual or 2 homosexual -- between the driver and the hitch-hiker, for whom the 3 lift he or she receives is considered the quid pro quo for the 4 sexual activity. Here, too, Section 647(b) could be used to 5 prosecute those involved, even though the conduct involves only 6 private consensual acts between adults.<sup>40/</sup> Then there are the 7 patients of sex therapists, part of whose therapy sometimes
8 involves having sexual relations with surrogate spouses in order
9 to improve their own sexual response. Under Section 647(b) these 10 patients could be convicted of prostitution, the consideration
11 being the payment of their medical bills. In sum, everything
12 about Section 647(b) suggests hasty draughtsmanship, without the 13 care and precision which customarily attends the writing of 14 criminal statutes. To contend that there are no prosecutions
15 under Section 647(b) in situations of the kind just instanced is 16 no answer at all; to accept this would mean that immunity from 17 penal sanctions rested entirely on the whim of the prosecutor
18 rather than on the law. Such flimsy protection of individual
19 rights ill comports with a Government that claims to be one of 20 laws and not of men. It should also be noted that failure to 21 prosecute does not immunize citizens from the infirmities of being 22 arrested and put through the criminal processes at the whim or 23 specific moral judgment of police officers. Additionally, such 24 overbroad statutory language results in the evils of a type of 25 "prior restraint" by citizens to avoid activity which is within 26 their constitutional rights and prerogatives. In fine, the 27 question which must be addressed is whether Section 647(b) is a
28 reasonable employment of the criminal sanction by the State. What

1 legitimate state interests are served by adopting the scatter-gun
2 approach of this statute, which prohibits all sexual conduct
3 involving consideration? Not only does this violate
4 constitutional mandates, as will presently be discussed, but it
5 would appear to be inconsistent with state policy as laid down in 6 the Brown Act and delineated in Pryor v. Municipal Court. Since 7 Section 647(b) antedates the Brown Act -- having been passed in 8 1961 -- it should be made to yield to the newer enactment for the 9 obvious reason that the public policy reflected in the more recent 10 law is presumed to represent the current legislative intention and 11 was meant to supersede anything inconsistent with it.
12 Inconsistency with other laws, it should be noted, is a
13 non-infrequent ground for statutory reinterpretation.<sup>41/</sup>

14       What, then, needs to be done? It is respectfully submitted
15 that, if Section 647(b) were to be limited in its scope to 16 prostitution in its public aspects, so that consideration would no 17 longer be the lodestone in determining criminality, it would be 18 impossible to use the law to prosecute the kinds of cases just 19 instanced. Its thrust would then be limited to furthering
20 legitimate state interests and its constitutional infirmities
21 would be cured. Section 647(b) would then be far more consonant
22 with the laws in other states, like New Jersey, which, as we have 23 seen, punishes prostitution only when it assumes the form of a
24 business. It has already been noted that prostitution constitutes 25 a business, a business with a number of socially-harmful
26 consequences. Its employees, the prostitutes, are frequently
27 mistreated or drawn into other forms of criminal activity by the 28 pimps who dominate them. They sometimes are carriers of venereal

1 disease. The customers of these businesses -- usually male
2 patrons -- are sometimes robbed or made the victims of other
3 crimes. Again, members of the public are sometimes affronted or 4 even harassed by the soliciting activities of blatant harlots.
5 All these aspects -- and others as well -- can be denominated the 6 "public aspects" of prostitution and, because of the social harm
7 for which they are not infrequently responsible, the conduct which 8 conduces to this harm is a legitimate object of state regulation
9 or of outright prohibition. However, for the purpose of deciding 10 the case at bar, this court need not address itself to these 11 issues, because narrowing the scope of Section 647(b) as proposed 12 in these pages would leave untouched the State's ability through 13 Section 647(b) and other statutes such as Section 266h and 266i to 14 proscribe these deleterious activities. This would be so because 15 all harmful activities fall under the "public aspects" of 16 prostitution -- aspects which are conceded to be well within the 17 State's legitimate authority to control or suppress.

18 //// //

19 //// //

20 //// //

21 //// //

22 //// //

23 //// //

24 //// //

25 //// //

26 //// //

27 //// //

28 //// //

1 I(e)

2 Public -v- Private Aspects of Prostitution

3 What, then, do we mean by the "public aspects" of 4 prostitution? Certainly, in this context, the term "public" is 5 not limited to conduct which occurs in a public place or which is 6 exposed to public view. The seduction of women for the purpose of 7 prostitution does not always occur in a public place, nor are the 8 offenses against the patrons of brothels ordinarily exposed to 9 public view. Clearly, the term "public" as used here does not 10 carry its conventional meaning. Rather it embraces all those 11 aspects of commercial sex which adversely affect the public in a 12 substantial way, whether they occur in public or not. These are 13 the aspects of commercial sexual conduct which have public or 14 social consequences, thus directly affecting the public weal.
15 They, and they alone, are legitimate objects of state regulation
16 or prohibition. For want of a better term they are denominated
17 the "public aspects" of prostitution. Those aspects which do not 18 fall under the head of "public aspects" are "private aspects" -- 19 again, not because they necessarily occur in private, but because 20 they are deemed to be the legitimate concern only of the private 21 individuals involved. In some of the pages which follow it will 22 also be seen that the distinction made between public and private 23 aspects of prostitution illumines the dividing line between 24 prostitution statutes which conform to constitutional imperatives
25 and those, like Section 647(b), which are found wanting.

26 A recent case in the State of New York made this distinction
27 quite clear. This occurred in the course of discussing one -- but 28 only one -- of the several public aspects of prostitution. In this

1 instance the public aspect was the annoyance and embarrassment
2 created among innocent users of the public streets by offensive
3 prostitutes. The court declared:

4 . . . Individual members of the public may indeed
5 be offended by the public conduct associated with 6 prostitution: they may be solicited on the street by 7 prostitutes, embarrassed by the advances of 8 streetwalkers, or find their path on the sidewalks or 9 thoroughfares blocked. Such conduct may, indeed, be a
10 harm legitimately of interest to the state should it
11 constitute public disorder. . . . However, . . . this 12 public conduct is not caused by the act of engaging in 13 sexual relations for a fee. . . . The public aspect of 14 prostitution, solicitation, must be distinguished from 15 its private aspect, the performance of consensual sexual 16 relations for a fee in private. Street solicitation is 17 a method of advertising the business of commercial sex.
18 It is separable from the underlying activity.<sup>42/</sup>

19 The court then went on to hold that "the prohibition of the 20 offensive public conduct associated with the solicitation of 21 prostitution may be a legitimate state objective." However, 22 "since . . . that public conduct may be dealt with separately from 23 the sexual conduct itself, it would be unreasonable for the state
24 to completely proscribe private, sexual conduct in order to reach 25 distinct public solicitation."<sup>43/</sup> The dividing line between 26 public and private aspects here delineated holds for the other
27 public aspects of prostitution as well, thus allowing the state
28 full sway to suppress those incidents of prostitution affected

1 with a public interest without trespassing upon protected private
2 conduct.

3	////	///
4	////	///
5	////	///
6	////	///
7	////	///
8	////	///
9	////	///
10	////	///
11	////	///
12	////	///
13	////	///
14	////	///
15	////	///
16	////	///
17	////	///
18	////	///
19	////	///
20	////	///
21	////	///
22	////	///
23	////	///
24	////	///
25	////	///
26	////	///
27	////	///
28	////	///

1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19
20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28

II
STATUTORY REGULATION OF PROSTITUTION IN CALIFORNIA

Until 1961 California did not criminalize private sexual conduct performed for money or other consideration. Neither did it prohibit the solicitation of such conduct.

However, early in California history a multitude of statutes was enacted to regulate and prohibit many practices associated with the business of prostitution. These acts remain in full force and effect at the present time and should not be affected by decriminalization of prostitution itself:

- Section 266: Enticement of unmarried female under 18 for prostitution;
- Section 266a: Abduction by fraudulent inducement;
- Section 266b: Abduction to live in illicit relationship;
- Section 266d: Receiving money for placing person in custody for purposes of cohabitation;
- Section 266f: Sale of person for immoral purposes;
- Section 266g: Placing wife in house of prostitution;
- Section 266h: Pimping
- Section 266i: Pandering;
- Section 267: Abduction of person under 18 for prostitution;
- Section 309: Admitting or keeping minors in a house of ill fame;

1 Section 315: Keeping or residing in a house of 2 ill fame;
3 Section 316: Keeping a disorderly house which 4 disturbs the peace;
5 Section 318: Prevailing upon person to visit a
6 house of prostitution;
7 Sections 11225-35: Red Light Abatement Act, regulating
8 public or private nuisances.

9 This brief is not concerned with these statutes or their 10 constitutionality. The focus here is only on the scope and 11 constitutionality of Section 647, subdivision (b) of the Penal 12 Code which prohibits soliciting or engaging in acts of 13 prostitution. It is therefore incumbant upon us to review the 14 statutory history and judicial interpretation of this statute
15 before addressing the constitutional and policy considerations
16 which are the primary focus of this brief.

17 //// ///
18 //// ///
19 //// ///
20 //// ///
21 //// ///
22 //// ///
23 //// ///
24 //// ///
25 //// ///
26 //// ///
27 //// ///
28 //// ///

1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19
20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28

III
LEGISLATIVE HISTORY AND JUDICIAL INTERPRETATION OF SECTION 647(b)
AS IT PERTAINS TO PROSTITUTION

The Pre-1961 Statute and Its Construction

In addition to the numerous statutes which were enacted by the California Legislature to regulate the business of prostitution and many of the evils which had been historically associated with it, Section 647, subdivision (10) punished as a vagrant anyone who was considered a "common prostitute." This statute was first enacted in the general penal code revision of 1872 and was based upon a similar statute enacted in 1855.<sup>44/</sup> The statute remained basically unchanged until 1961. Thus, between 1855 and 1961, engaging in sexual relations for a fee and soliciting for such conduct were not made criminal by California law. Pimping (266h), pandering (266i), keeping ahouse of ill fame (315), and being a "common prostitute" (647, sub. 10) were crimes.

Since Section 647(10) is the predecessor of Section 647(b), we now examine the scope and definitions given to the former statute by the California appellate courts. The Legislature did not define the term "prostitution" or the term "prostitute" as used in Section 647(10) or in statutes regulating other aspects of prostitution; it merely relied on judicial interpretations of these terms.

There is only one reported appellate decision reviewing a conviction under the pre-1961 statute. The court in People v. Brandt (1956) 306 P.2d 1069, at 1070, interpreted Section 647(10)

1 and stated:

2 Obviously a male cannot be a prostitute and hence
3 is not subject to prosecution under subdivision (10) of 4 this section. Am.Jur., Vol.42, page 260; 8 Words and 5 Phrases, Common Prostitute, page 166; Ferguson v.
6 Superior Court 26 Cal.App. 554, 147P. 603; In re Carey
7 57 Cal.App. 297, 304, 207 P. 271.

8 This holding is buttressed by other California appellate 9 decisions interpreting the meaning of "prostitution" as used in 10 the pimping and pandering statutes. In the context of these 11 statutes California courts had consistently defined "prostitution"
12 as the "common, indiscriminate, illicit intercourse of a woman for 13 hire." Ferguson v. Superior Court (1915) 26 Cal.App. 554; People
14 v. Marron (1934) 140 Cal. App. 432; People v. Mitchell (1949) 91
15 Cal.App.2d 214; People v. Head (1956) 146 Cal.App.2d 744; People
16 v. Courtney (1959) 176 Cal.App.2d 731.

17 /// ///
18 /// ///
19 /// ///
20 /// ///
21 /// ///
22 /// ///
23 /// ///
24 /// ///
25 /// ///
26 /// ///
27 /// ///
28 /// ///

1 III(a)

2 The 1961 Statute and Its Construction

3 The first reported legislative proposal for change of Section
4 647 came after a hearing of a subcommittee of the Assembly Interim
5 Committee on Judiciary which met in San Francisco in July of 6 1958.<sup>45/</sup> There were numerous protests against alleged repressive
7 police practices and, as a result, Section 647 became a subject of 8 legislative inquiry. One issue which was discussed concerned the 9 adoption of a state policy to punish persons for their acts and 10 not their status. The following year Assembly Bill 2712 was 11 introduced to revise Section 647. The subdivision dealing with 12 prostitution would have punished every person who "For pecuniary 13 profit, solicits or engages in any act of prostitution."<sup>46/</sup> Most 14 other subdivisions of Section 647 would also have been revised.
15 The bill passed the Legislature but it was vetoed by the Governor
16 for reasons unconnected with the issue of prostitution.

17 In 1960 the California Supreme Court reviewed a portion of 18 Section 647 which punished as a vagrant anyone who was a "common 19 drunkard." The Court held that where the entire meaning of the 20 subdivision centered on the words "common drunkard," the 21 subdivision was unconstitutionally vague in violation of both
22 state and Federal constitutions. In re Newbern (1960) 53 Cal.2d
23 786. This decision gave added impetus for the movement for 24 legislative revision of Section 647 and another bill was 25 introduced in 1960 to revise this statute and its subdivisions.

26 Professor Arthur H. Sherry, the person primarily responsible 27 for drafting the revisions of Section 647 which were finally 28 passed by the Legislature in 1960 (effective in 1961) suggested a

1 slight modification of Assembly Bill 2712. In his scholarly
2 article on the subject of vagrancy statutes, he wrote, "This is a
3 simple description of the conduct to be proscribed. It was 4 drafted before the decision in the Newbern case which has, by 5 necessary implication, deleted the term 'common prostitutes' from 6 the list of those who are vagrants. The qualification 'for 7 pecuniary profit' added by the Assembly Bill seems unnecessary," 8 adding in a footnote "by definition, a prostitute is one who
9 engages in sexual intercourse for hire. People v. Head (1956) 146
10 Cal.App.2d 744, 304 P.2d 761." Other than the fact that the 11 Newbern case mandated some sort of legislative revision and that 12 policy considerations necessitated punishing conduct rather than 13 status, the only reason given by Sherry for the regulation of 14 prostitution was that "the pimp, the panderer and the prostitute
15 cannot be permitted to flaunt their services at large."<sup>48/</sup>

16 The Assembly Interim Committee on Criminal Procedure
17 expressly stated it was adopting the definition of the term
18 "prostitution" as found in People v. Head, supra. That Committee
19 approved Sherry's revision and quoted his comments with full 20 concurrence.<sup>49/</sup>

21 Therefore, as it became law in 1961, Section 647, subdivision
22 (b) made subject to criminal penalties every person who "solicits
23 or who engages in any act of prostitution."

24 Who was subject to prosecution under this new prohibition?
25 What conduct was subject to prosecution for soliciting or 26 engaging? The Legislature used the phrase "Every person who 27 commits any of the following acts" before describing the speech
28 and conduct prohibited. Should this be read literally or did

1 there exist exceptions? What conduct was unlawful to engage in or
2 solicit under this subdivision? With respect to the latter
3 question the Legislature answered it by adopting the definition of 4 "prostitution" as found in People v. Head, supra. The prohibited
5 conduct was "common, indiscriminate, illicit intercourse of a
6 woman for hire." See, also, People v. Frey (1964) 228 Cal.App.2d
7 35. As to the former question, "who was subject to prosecution,"
8 a recent pronouncement from a California appellate court is of 9 assistance. "The words, 'every person' . . . who solicits . . .
10 any act of prostitution,' are clear and unambiguous. 'Every,'
11 means 'each and all within the range of contemplated
12 possibilities.' (Webster's New Internat. Dict. (3rd ed. 1961)
13 Unabridged, p. 788."<sup>50/</sup> The court held that "all persons" who 14 solicit an act of prostitution are guilty. This applies to 15 customers as well as prostitutes.<sup>51/</sup>

16 Thus, the 1961 statute, as interpreted by the courts,
17 proscribed solicitation or engaging in heterosexual intercourse
18 for a fee, without regard to whether the solicitation was made by 19 a man or a woman, a customer or a prostitute.

20 //// ///
21 //// ///
22 //// ///
23 //// ///
24 //// ///
25 //// ///
26 //// ///
27 //// ///
28 //// ///

1 III(b)

2 The 1965 Amendment

3 In 1965 the Legislature amended Section 647(b). The wording
4 of the 1961 enactment was not repealed; instead, the Legislature
5 expanded the definition of prostitution to give the police a tool
6 to deal with the "homosexual problem." Whereas the 1961 enactment
7 incorporated the definition of prostitution found in People v.
8 Head, supra, which was limited to sexual intercourse between a man
9 and a woman, this could obviously not be used to prosecute
10 homosexual sex for hire. Therefore, the Legislature added a
11 second sentence to subdivision (b) which read:

12 As used in this subdivision, "prostitution"
13 includes any lewd act between persons of the same sex
14 for money or other consideration.<sup>52/</sup>

15 This amendment created three changes in the prostitution law.
16 First, it expanded the definition of prostitution to include
17 homosexual acts. Second, it enlarged the ambit of the law to 18 prohibit lewd acts rather than its previous and more narrow
19 criminalization of sexual intercourse for hire. Finally, instead 20 of penalizing the sexual conduct or solicitation if it were "for 21 hire," the amendment enlarged the category of acts proscribed to 22 include all such acts "for money or other consideration."

23 Since the primary purpose of the 1965 amendment was to bring 24 homosexual acts within the reach of the prostitution law, the 25 rationale for the first change, i.e., adding "of the same sex," is 26 obvious. Also, since persons of the same sex are incapable of 27 engaging in traditional sexual intercourse with each other, i.e.,
28 insertion of the penis into the vagina, some additional language

1 was needed to define the prohibited homosexual conduct. The term
2 "lewd" as used in Sections 647(a) and 647(d) was a possible
3 answer, since those statutes were successfully being used by law
4 enforcement primarily to arrest homosexuals for noncommercial sex.
5 This term "lewd" was also expansive enough to include a wide
6 variety of sexual conduct without necessitating the Legislature's
7 use of embarrassingly explicit language. With respect to the 8 third change, the only plausible rationale for defining the 9 pecuniary aspect as "money or other consideration" is that the 10 Legislature wanted no "loopholes" in the law. If the 11 consideration for the sexual conduct was something of value other 12 than cash, this too was to be prohibited.

13	////	///
14	////	///
15	////	///
16	////	///
17	////	///
18	////	///
19	////	///
20	////	///
21	////	///
22	////	///
23	////	///
24	////	///
25	////	///
26	////	///
27	////	///
28	////	///

1 III(c)

2 The 1969 Amendment and Present Wording

3 In 1969 the Legislature again amended Section 647(b). This 4 amendment deleted from the second sentence of the subdivision the 5 words "of the same sex." There have been no other amendments to 6 the statute, so that the section presently reads:

7 Every person who commits any of the following acts
8 is guilty of disorderly conduct, a misdemeanor: (b) Who 9 solicits or engages in any act of prostitution. As used
10 in this subdivision, "prostitution" includes any lewd
11 act between persons for money or other consideration.

12 In neither the 1965 amendment nor the 1969 amendment did the 13 Legislature define the phrase "any lewd act," thus leaving the 14 extent of the proscription vague and open to individual
15 interpretation and ultimately to limitation by the courts.

16 Although the Legislative history does not appear to indicate
17 the reason for the 1969 amendment, one logical explanation can be 18 found. This amendment further expands the proscription to make 19 possible prosecutions of heterosexual -- as well as homosexual --
20 "lewd acts." Previously, because the 1961 amendment incorporated 21 the definition of prostitution from People v. Head, supra, the 22 only prohibited conduct was heterosexual intercourse for hire.
23 Homosexual lewd acts were included by the 1965 version of the law.
24 Finally, in 1969, all lewd acts for money or other consideration
25 were prohibited.

26 The expanded definition of "prostitution" was not discussed
27 by California appellate courts until 1976. In a case involving a 28 conviction under the pandering statute (Penal Code Section 266i

1 prohibits procuring another person for the purpose of prostitution
2 or encouraging another to become a prostitute), the court held 3 that:

4           Prostitution is defined as "Common lewdness of a
5 woman for gain" (Black's Law Dictionary (4th ed.)), 6 "act or practice of engaging in sexual intercourse for 7 money." (Random House Dictionary of the English
8 Language (Unabridged Ed.)), or ". . . any lewd act
9 between persons for money or other consideration."
10 (Pen.Code, Section 647(b).) People v. Fixler (1976) 56
11 Cal.App.3d 321, 325.

12           The Fixler case indicates that sexual intercourse for money 13 is prostitution, regardless of the motivation of the participants
14 to the sexual act:

15           There can be no question but that Patricia engaged
16 in lewd acts and sexual intercourse for money and that 17 defendants, by providing the money and directing her
18 performances, procured, caused and induced her to do so.
19 (citations). There is nothing in statute or case law
20 which would remove this conduct from the ambit of the 21 statute (Pen.Code, Section 266i) simply because the 22 money was provided by nonparticipants in the sexual 23 activity or because defendant's primary motivation was 24 to photograph the activity.

25           It seems self-evident that if A pays B to engage in 26 sexual intercourse with C, then B is engaging in 27 prostitution and that situation is not changed by the 28 fact that A may stand to observe the act or photograph

1           it. Fixler, supra, at 325.

2           That same year another appellate court in California affirmed
3 the principle that the prostitution statute covers both men and 4 women whether customer or prostitute. "Penal Code Section 647,
5 subdivision (b), is clearly designed to punish specific acts
6 without reference to the status of the perpetrator." Leffel v.
7 Municipal Court (1976) 54 Cal.App. 3d 569, 573., at 575. The use
8 of the term "every person" in the prostitution statute is to be 9 read literally and means "each and all within the range of 10 contemplated possibilities." Leffell, supra, at 576.

11           This broad interpretation of the term "prostitution" was 12 accepted by yet another appellate court some two years later:

13                   For the purpose of defining the charged offenses of 14 pimping and pandering the court defined prostitution as 15 "soliciting another person to engage in or engaging in 16 sexual intercourse or other lewd or dissolute acts
17 between persons for money or other consideration." The 18 defense theory is that the statutes condemning pimping
19 and pandering should be taken as implying a definition
20 of the term "prostitution" which imports sexual 21 intercourse for hire and does not include other forms of 22 commercial sex acts. This contention cannot be 23 sustained. The definition used by the court was 24 properly taken from Penal Code Section 647(b) which 25 defines prostitution as including "any lewd act between 26 persons for money or other consideration." People v.
27 Grow (1978) 84 Cal.App.3d 310, 313.

28           The definition of prostitution was again the subject of

1 judicial review in 1977. In a case involving the propriety of
2 using the Red Light Abatement Law to closing a building as a
3 nuisance, the court held that sexual intercourse for hire by 4 models whose activity is photographed for a non-obscene
5 publication is "prostitution." People ex rel. Van De Kamp. v.
6 American Art Enterprises (1977) 75 Cal.App.3d 523, 529.

7 The latest appellate interpretation of Section 647(b) is 8 found in People v. Norris (1978) 152 Cal.Rptr. 134. In that case
9 the defendant was convicted of soliciting an undercover vice 10 officer to engage in an act of prostitution. While seated in the 11 officer's automobile, the defendant solicited the officer to 12 engage in an act of oral copulation for $15.00. The location
13 where the act was intended to occur was left unspecified by the 14 defendant. Several issues were raised and addressed on appeal.
15 Defendant complained that the trial court had misinstructed the 16 jury on the required criminal intent under the solicitation
17 portion of the statute. He argued that soliciting for 18 prostitution is a specific intent crime. The appellate court
19 agreed. It held that engaging in prostitution is a general intent 20 crime and the only intent which must be proved is the intent to 21 commit the prohibited conduct. However, the soliciting portion of 22 the statute is a specific intent crime, i.e., the requisite intent
23 is to engage in the crime of prostitution. The court held that 24 the purpose of the solicitation portion of the statute is to 25 prevent the solicitation of crime. Defendant Norris also 26 complained about the jury instructions defining "prostitution." One
27 instruction, CALJIC 16.420, reads as follows:

28 Every person who solicits another to engage in

1 . . . [sexual intercourse for money or other
2 consideration] [or] [any lewd act between persons of the 3 same or different sexes for money or other
4 consideration], is guilty of a misdemeanor."

5 Another instruction, CALJIC 16.402, defined the term "lewd"
6 as follows:

7 As used in the foregoing instruction, the word
8 . . . "lewd" . . . mean[s] lustful, lascivious,
9 unchaste, wanton, or loose in morals and conduct.

10 The appellate court found these to be proper instructions,
11 relying on the authority of People v. Williams (1976) 59
12 Cal.App.3d 225, 229. The Williams Court had authorized such an 13 instruction on the definition of "lewd" as used in Section 647,
14 subdivision (a).

15 Defendant Norris also claimed that the trial court should 16 have acquitted him because there was no proof that the act of oral 17 copulation was to be performed in a public place. He argued that 18 in addition to the element of money or other consideration, the 19 sexual act solicited must be "lewd." Private sexual conduct 20 between consenting adults is no longer a crime in California and 21 therefore such acts may not be considered "lewd" unless they are 22 performed in public he claimed. Relying on Silva v. Municipal
23 Court (1974) 40 Cal.App.3d 733, 735-736, the court held that a 24 solicited act may be considered lewd regardless of where it is to 25 be performed. In Silva, the solicitation portion of Section 647, 26 subdivision (a), had been challenged; Silva was decided before the 27 passage of the Consenting Adults Act in 1976.

28 ////

///

1 III(d)

2 California Supreme Court

3 Review of Section 647(b)

4 The preceding pages have demonstrated that the bulk of cases
5 interpreting the definition of "prostitution" have involved
6 prosecutions under statutes other than Penal Code Section 647(b),
7 such as the pimping and pandering statutes. The only intermediate
8 appellate court cases reviewing Section 647(b) or its predecessor
9 have been Brandt, supra, (Appellate Department of the San Joaquin 10 Superior Court), Leffell, supra, (Fifth District Court of Appeal), 11 and Norris, supra, (Appellate Department of the Los Angeles
12 Superior Court). None of these cases decided issues concerning
13 the constitutionality of Section 647(b) but, rather, involved
14 questions of sufficiency of evidence or interpretation of words
15 and phrases. Notwithstanding the number of years that Penal Code
16 Section 647(b) and its predecessor have been in existence, and the 17 thousands of arrests which are made for violations each year
18 throughout the state, it is amazing that there are the only three 19 reported opinions concerning the statute from intermediate 20 appellate courts over the span of the last 100 years.

21 Only once has the California Supreme Court reviewed Section
22 647(b). In People v. Superior Court (Hartway) (1977) 19 Cal.3d
23 338, the Court considered and decided two issues: (1) whether the 24 statute was being discriminatorily enforced in violation of equal 25 protection, and (2) whether the word "solicit" as used in the 26 statute was unconstitutionally vague. The Court answered each 27 question in the negative. The Court defined the term "solicit" as 28 follows: "to ask earnestly; to ask for the purpose of receiving;

1 to endeavor to obtain by asking or pleading; to entreat, implore,
2 or importune; to make petition to; to plead for; to try to obtain
3 . . . While it does imply a serious request, it requires no
4 particular degree of importunity, entreaty, imploration, or 5 supplication. . ." Hartway, supra, at 346. With respect to the 6 issue of discriminatory enforcement, the Court held that the 7 police did not violate equal protection by concentrating their 8 efforts on investigations and arrests of prostitutes instead of 9 the customers. Justices Tobriner and Wright dissented on this 10 issue. Chief Justice Bird and Justice Tobriner dissented from the 11 denial of rehearing. It appears that Hartway was decided by the 12 Court when it was in transition. The majority opinion was written 13 by Justice Clark, joined by Justices Mosk, Richardson, and 14 Sullivan (Sullivan was retired and sitting under temporary 15 assignment until his successor was confirmed). The dissenting
16 opinion was written by Acting Chief Justice Tobriner and was 17 concurred in by Justice Wright (Wright was retired, but like
18 Sullivan, was sitting on temporary assignment until his successor
19 was confirmed). Since the Court was in a period of great 20 transition, one wonders whether the Hartway case would be decided 21 the same way today.

22 //// //

23 //// //

24 //// //

25 //// //

26 //// //

27 //// //

28 //// //

1 III(e)

2 Summary of Present Scope and Interpretation
3 of Section 647, Subdivision (b)

4 ENGAGING IN PROSTITUTION

5 1. Who is subject to prosecution?

6 Every person, both men and women, customers and 7 prostitutes, and "each and all within the range of 8 contemplated possibilities." Leffel, supra.

9 2. *What sexual acts are prohibited if money or other
10 consideration is involved?*

11 Sexual intercourse -- Head, Fixler, supra.
12 Any lewd act between persons -- Fixler, Grow,
13 Norris, supra.

14 3. What is the requisite intent or motivation?

15 To engage in the prohibited conduct, i.e., to 16 engage in sexual intercourse or any lewd act between 17 persons for money or other consideration. Norris,
18 supra.

19 4. What is sexual intercourse?

20 Penis in vagina -- see Penal Code Sections 261
21 (rape) and 261.5 (unlawful sexual intercourse) and cases
22 thereunder.

23 5. What is a lewd act between persons?

24 Conduct which is lustful, lascivious, unchaste,
25 wanton, or loose in morals. Norris, supra; but see
26 Pryor v. Municipal Court 59 Cal.3d 238, which may 27 require alteration of this definition.

28 SOLICITING AN ACT OF PROSTITUTION

1. What does "solicit" mean?

To plead for, to try to obtain, to ask for the purpose of receiving, although no particular degree of importunity is required. Hartway, supra.

2. What criminal intent is required?

It must be a serious request with the specific intent that the crime of engaging in prostitution must be committed. Norris, supra.

3. Who is subject to prosecution?

"All persons" who so solicit. Leffel, supra.

////

///

////

///

1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19
20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28

IV
UNDERLYING CONSTITUTIONAL
AND STATUTORY CONSIDERATIONS

The previous pages of this brief have explored the history of governmental regulation of private sexual conduct for money. We have analyzed the common law development of such regulation, early and modern English law, the international status of prostitution law, and contrasted all of this with California statutory and case law. With this background material in mind and at hand, we now turn to the constitutional and statutory considerations which are necessary to a proper judicial review of Section 647(b).

Before addressing the main question -- may private conduct between consenting adults always be punished by the state merely because money or other consideration is involved? -- we first explore the statutory and constitutional protections of the right to sexual privacy when money or other consideration is not in issue.

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19
20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28

IV(a)

Legislative Recognition of a Right to Sexual Privacy

California law is consonant with English common law in that simple fornication has never been illegal in this state. Other forms of private sex were outlawed until very recently, e.g., sodomy, oral copulation, adulterous cohabitation. It was not until 1976 that all forms of private sexual conduct between consenting adults (not involving money or other consideration) were decriminalized by the Legislature.<sup>53/</sup> This action by the California Legislature came some 15 years after the first such decriminalization by a state legislature in the United States.

In 1961 Illinois became the first state to decriminalize such private sexual conduct, following the recommendations of the Model Penal Code of the American Law Institute. Seven years elapsed before Connecticut became the second state to adopt those recommendations. Today there are twenty-two states in all which have legislatively recognized a right to sexual privacy by enacting such legislation.<sup>54/</sup>

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

1 IV(b)

2 Recognition of Sexual Privacy
3 by the Federal Judiciary

4 The right to privacy is not specifically mentioned in the 5 United States Constitution. That concept gained significance as a
6 legal right in the famous law review article by Samuel D. Warren
7 and Louis B. Brandeis written in 1890.<sup>55/</sup> They emphasized the 8 need for judicial protection against the ever increasing invasions
9 of individual privacy. They recognized that the exact scope of 10 this right would develop as society changed and that it would be 11 necessary for judges to "define anew the exact nature and extent 12 of such protection."

13 This law review article became a catalyst for judicial 14 recognition of the right to privacy in American jurisprudence.<sup>56/</sup>
15 In its early development the right to privacy was found to stem
16 from the Fourth and Fifth Amendments. The United States Supreme 17 Court described these Amendments as a shield against governmental 18 invasions "of the sanctity of a man's home and the privacies of 19 life."<sup>57/</sup> In Union Pacific Railroad v. Botsford (1891) 141 U.S.
20 250, 251, the Supreme Court held that the right to privacy
21 encompasses the right of individuals to control their own bodies, 22 stating:

23 No right is held more sacred, or is more carefully
24 guarded . . . than the right of every individual to the 25 possession and control of his own person, from all
26 restraint or interferences of others.

27 No discussion of the early history of the right to privacy
28 and its judicial recognition would be complete without reference

1 to Justice Brandeis' dissenting opinion in Olmstead v. United
2 States (1928) 277 U.S. 438, 478:

3           The makers of our Constitution undertook to secure
4 conditions favorable to the pursuit of happiness . . .
5 They sought to protect Americans in their beliefs, their 6 thoughts, their emotions and their sensations. They 7 conferred against the Government, the right to be let 8 alone -- the most comprehensive of rights and the right
9 most valued by civilized men.

10           It was not until 1965 that the Supreme Court recognized that 11 the right to privacy was a basic right implicitly protected by the 12 Federal Constitution. Griswold v. Connecticut (1965) 381 U.S.
13 479. Although there was disagreement as to within which 14 Amendments of the Constitution this right was to be impliedly
15 found, seven justices agreed that it existed. Interestingly
16 enough, the Griswold case involved the right to privacy in a 17 sexual context. Since the case involved a married couple, the 18 Court discussed the right in terms of "marital privacy."

19           Over the next twelve years the federal courts methodically
20 expanded the parameters of the right to privacy. In 1967 the 21 Supreme Court held that the right to privacy protects persons, not 22 places; even when technically in a public place, a person may have 23 a reasonable expectation of privacy against surreptitious
24 governmental action. Katz v. United States (1967) 88 S.Ct. 507.
25 In 1968 the United States Court of Appeals held that the Indiana
26 sodomy law may violate the right to marital privacy if it failed
27 to allow a husband to assert a defense of "consent" in a
28 prosecution for having anal intercourse with his wife. Cotner v.

1 Henry (7th Cir., 1968) 394 F.2d 873, 875. In 1969 the Supreme
2 Court again addressed the issue of sexual privacy in a case
3 involving prosecution for possession of obscene material in the 4 privacy of a person's home. In Stanley v. Georgia (1969) 394 U.S.
5 557, 564-565, the Court noted that an individual has a "right to 6 satisfy his intellectual and emotional needs in the privacy of his 7 own home." The Court added, "For also fundamental is the right to 8 be free, except in very limited circumstances, from unwanted
9 governmental intrusions into one's privacy." The next year a 10 three-judge-court voided the Texas sodomy law on the grounds that 11 it provided for no exceptions from prosecution for private sexual 12 relations and therefore violated the right to marital privacy.
13 Buchanan v. Batchelor (N.D.Tex., 1970) 308 F. Supp. 729,
14 732-733.<sup>58/</sup> That same year a federal court in California held
15 that extramarital heterosexual cohabitation which was discreet --
16 not notorious or scandalous -- was within the plaintiff's right to 17 privacy and that the government could not condition employment on 18 a waiver of that right. Mindel v. U.S. Civil Service Commission
19 (N.D.Cal., 1970) 312 F. Supp. 584, 487. A decision from a federal 20 court in the eastern part of the country also activated the right 21 to privacy that year to protect a police officer from losing his 22 job merely because he was a practicing nudist who gathered with 23 fellow nudists on weekends. Bruns v. Pomerleau (D.Md., 1970) 319
24 F. Supp. 58. In 1972 the Supreme Court ended the debate over 25 whether the right they discussed in Griswold was limited to 26 marital privacy. In Eisenstadt v. Baird (1972) 405 U.S. 438, 453,
27 Justice Brennan, writing for the majority, stated:

28           It is true that in Griswold the right of privacy in

1 question inhered in the marital relationship. Yet the
2 married couple is not an independent entity with a mind
3 and heart of its own, but an association of two 4 individuals each with a separate intellectual and
5 emotional make-up. If the right to privacy means
6 anything, it is the right of the individual, married or 7 single, to be free from unwarranted governmental
8 intrusion into matters so fundamentally affecting a
9 person as the decision whether to bear or beget a child.
10 That same year a three-judge court found that a Congressional 11 enactment denying foodstamps to needy household consisting of 12 unrelated persons violated the rights to privacy and freedom of 13 association of such persons. The district court recognized that 14 such an attempt to regulate nontraditional living arrangements is 15 inconsistent with fundamental values of privacy and personal
16 autonomy. Moreno v. Department of Agriculture (D.C.D.C., 1972)
17 345 F. Supp. 310. In 1973 the Supreme Court further expanded the 18 right to sexual privacy. In Roe v. Wade (1973) 410 U.S. 113, the 19 Court held that a Texas abortion statute which forbade an abortion 20 except to save the life of the mother violated the right to 21 privacy. Even though important state interests were involved in 22 protecting the fetus, the government interest was not compelling
23 enough to infringe on the mother's freedom of choice to terminate
24 the pregnancy at will during the first trimester. The Roe case
25 again emphasized that this right to privacy was an individual
26 right.
27 This ever expanding right to privacy continued to gain almost 28 unrestricted momentum until the issue of homosexuality was raised.

1 Two anonymous plaintiffs manufactured a civil suit to enjoin the
2 enforcement of the Virginia sodomy law under which they said they
3 feared prosecution because they were practicing homosexuals. In a 4 two-to-one decision a three-judge district court denied them the 5 relief sought -- quoting from the Bible! Doe v. Commonwealth's
6 Attorney for the City of Richmond (E.D.Va., 1975) 403 F. Supp.
7 1199. The Supreme Court, three justices dissenting, summarily
8 affirmed after the plaintiff's appealed to that Court from the 9 lower court ruling.<sup>59/</sup> The following year the Supreme Court
10 clarified the import and precedential value of Doe v.
11 Commonwealth. In Carey v. Population Services International
12 (1977) 97 S.Ct. 2010, Justice Brennan, writing for the majority,
13 stated that Doe is not to be considered binding precedent and that 14 the extent to which private sexual conduct between consenting
15 adults is protected by the Federal Constitution is still an open
16 question.<sup>60/</sup>

17 Thus, while the federal courts and particularly the Supreme 18 Court has recognized a right to privacy, with application to 19 certain sexual matters, the full extent of that federal right and 20 its application to private sexual conduct of adults is not yet 21 resolved.

22 //// //

23 //// //

24 //// //

25 //// //

26 //// //

27 //// //

28 //// //

1 IV(c)

2 State Court Decisions
3 and State Constitutions

4 Almost simultaneous with the seeming setback of Doe v.
5 Commonwealth, several state appellate courts considered the issue
6 of sexual privacy and found that the Federal Constitution protects
7 private sexual relations between consenting adults. In State v.
8 Elliot (N.M.App., 1975) 539 P.2d 207, the New Mexico Court of 9 Appeals came to such a conclusion even though none of the parties
10 or attorneys in the action raised the issue. That case involved a 11 prosecution under the sodomy law of that state. The defendant was 12 convicted under facts indicating that force was involved in 13 obtaining the sex acts. The Court, sua sponte, held that the 14 statute was overbroad in violation of the right to privacy because 15 it did not provide for the defense of "consent." One year later
16 the New Mexico Supreme Court reversed and held that the Court of 17 Appeals should not have reached the issue on its own
18 initiative.<sup>61/</sup>

19 Two different panels of the Arizona Court of Appeals also 20 held that state's sodomy laws unconstitutional in 1975. In one 21 case the defendant was charged with sodomizing his wife, and the 22 other involved unmarried persons. In both cases force was 23 alleged, and the defendants claimed "consent" as a defense. Both
24 panels came to the conclusion that the Federal Constitution
25 protects consensual sodomy in private. State v. Bateman
26 (Ariz.App., 1975) 547 P.2d 732; State v. Calloway (Ariz.App. 1975)
27 542 P.2d 1147. The cases were consolidated for hearing in the 28 Arizona Supreme Court, and the following year that court reversed

1 both decisions. State v. Bateman and Calloway (Ariz., 1976) 547
2 P.2d 6. Citing the Bible, that court held that private sexual
3 relations are constitutionally protected except insofar as the 4 state has an interest in regulating them; ever since biblical
5 times, the court said, the state has seen fit to prohibit deviate
6 sexual relations.

7 Also in 1975, a trial court in New York held that the New
8 York consensual sodomy law, which law allowed consensual sodomy
9 between spouses but forbade it if the parties were not married to 10 each other, violated the right to privacy and equal protection for 11 single individuals. People v. Rise & Mehr (1975) 363 N.Y.S.2d 12 484. That case was later reversed by the New York Court of 13 Appeals. That court felt that the record did not present
14 sufficient facts for deciding the issue, and it therefore sent the 15 case back to the trial court for further proceedings. The Court
16 of Appeals did, however, indicate that Doe v. Commonwealth was not 17 dispositive and that the Court might be receptive to deciding the 18 privacy issue in a future case.<sup>62/</sup>

19 In 1976 the Iowa Supreme Court declared that state's sodomy
20 law unconstitutional, holding that it violated the right to 21 privacy of married couples and heterosexual individuals. State v.
22 Pilcher (Iowa 1976) 242 N.W.2d 348. The court left open the 23 question as to whether the right to privacy extended to homosexual
24 relations in private, feeling somewhat uneasy on this issue in 25 view of Doe v. Commonwealth. That same year the Iowa Legislature 26 approved a bill to decriminalize private, adult, consensual sexual 27 conduct for all adults regardless of sexual orientation.

28 The next year a fornication statute was declared

1 unconstitutional by the New Jersey Supreme Court. In the case of 2 State v. Saunders (N.J., 1977) 381 A.2d 333, the defendants were 3 convicted under a statute which prohibited "an act of illicit
4 sexual intercourse by a man, married or single, with an unmarried
5 woman." Defendants raised constitutional objections to their
6 conviction in the trial court. Although agreeing that the right
7 to privacy had been expanded to include unmarried individuals by 8 the Eisenstadt case in 1972, the trial judge concluded that the 9 state's interest in preventing venereal disease and illegitimacy
10 were sufficiently "compelling" to justify the prohibition.

11 On appeal, the New Jersey Supreme Court held:

12 We conclude that the conduct statutorily defined as 13 fornication involves, by its very nature, a fundamental 14 personal choice. Thus, the statute infringes upon the 15 right of privacy. Although persons may differ as to the 16 propriety and morality of such conduct and while we 17 certainly do not condone its particular manifestations
18 in this case, such a decision is necessarily encompassed
19 in the concept of personal autonomy which our 20 Constitution seeks to safeguard. . .

21 As we stated earlier, the Court in Carey and Wade
22 underscored the inherently private nature of a person's 23 decision to bear or beget children. It would be rather 24 anomalous if such a decision could be constitutionally 25 protected while the more fundamental decision as to 26 whether to engage in the conduct which is a necessary
27 prerequisite to child-bearing could be constitutionally 28 prohibited. Surely, such a choice involves

1 considerations which are at least as intimate and
2 personal as those which are involved in choosing whether
3 to use contraceptives. We therefore join with other
4 courts which have held that such sexual activities
5 between adults are protected by the right of privacy

6 . . . .

7 Finally, we note that our doubts as to the 8 constitutionality of the fornication statute are also
9 impelled by this Court's development of a
10 constitutionally mandated "zone" of privacy protecting 11 individuals from unwarranted governmental intrusion into 12 matters of intimate personal and family concern. It is 13 now settled that the right of privacy guaranteed under 14 the Fourteenth Amendment had an analogue in our State
15 Constitution.

16 Unlike the California Constitution which contains a specific
17 provision guaranteeing the right to privacy, the New Jersey
18 Constitution has no explicit provision on privacy.
19 Norwithstanding that fact, the Court in New Jersey found the right
20 to be implicit in other provisions.

21 Having found the fornication statute to impinge on the right
22 to privacy, the court then considered whether it could be 23 justified by any compelling state interest. Four reasons were 24 argued by the State in support of the statute: preventing 25 venereal disease, preventing an increase in illegitimate children,
26 protecting the marital relationship, and protecting public morals.

27 In response to these arguments, the court held:

28 [I]f the State's interest in the instant statute is

1 that it is helpful in preventing venereal disease, we
2 conclude that it is counter-productive. To the extent
3 that any successful program to combat venereal disease
4 must depend upon affected persons coming forward for 5 treatment, the present statute operates as a deterrent
6 to such voluntary participation. The fear of being
7 prosecuted for the "crime" of fornication can only deter
8 people from seeking such necessary treatment. . .

9 As the Court found in Carey, absent highly coercive
10 measures, it is extremely doubtful that people will be 11 deterred from engaging in such natural activities. The 12 Court there rejected the assertion that the threat of 13 unwanted pregnancy would deter persons from engaging in 14 extramarital activities. (Citation.) We conclude that 15 the same is true for the possibility of being prosecuted
16 under the fornication statute. . . If unavailability of 17 contraceptives is not likely to deter people from 18 engaging in illicit sexual activities, it follows that 19 the fear of unwanted pregnancies will be equally
20 ineffective. . .

21 The last two reasons offered by the State as 22 compelling justifications for the enactment -- that it
23 protects the marital relationship and the public morals
24 by preventing illicit sex -- offer little additional 25 support for the law. Whether or not abstention is 26 likely to induce persons to marry, this statute can in 27 no way be considered a permissible means of fostering 28 what may otherwise be a socially beneficial institution.

1 If we were to hold that the State could attempt to
2 coerce people into marriage, we would undermine the very
3 independent choice which lies at the core of the right
4 of privacy. . .

5 This is not to suggest that the State may not
6 regulate, in an appropriate manner, activities which are
7 designed to further public morality. Our conclusion
8 today extends no further than to strike down a measure
9 which has as its objective the regulation of private 10 morality. To the extent that [this statute] serves as 11 an official sanction of certain conceptions of desirable
12 lifestyles, social mores or individualized beliefs, it
13 is not an appropriate exercise of the police power.

14 Fornication may be abhorrent to the morals and 15 deeply held beliefs of many persons. But any 16 appropriate "remedy" for such conduct cannot come from 17 legislative fiat. Private personal acts between two 18 consenting adults are not to be lightly meddled with by 19 the State. The right to personal autonomy is 20 fundamental to a free society. Persons who view
21 fornication as opprobrious conduct may seek strenuously
22 to dissuade people from engaging in it. However, they 23 may not inhibit such conduct through the coercive power
24 of the criminal law. . . . The fornication statute
25 mocks the dignity of both offenders and enforcers.
26 Surely the dignity of the law is undermined when an 27 intimate personal activity between consenting adults can 28 be dragged into court and "exposed."

1           The following year a New Jersey appellate court, applying the 2 principles of the Saunders case, declared that state's sodomy law
3 unconstitutional.<sup>63/</sup>

4           The most recent pronouncement on sexual privacy was delivered
5 only this year by a New York appellate court. In People v.
6 Onofre, ___ N.Y.S.2d ___, Appellate Division of the Supreme Court,
7 Fourth Department, Case No. 914/1979, decided January 24, 1980,
8 the defendant was prosecuted for violating that state's consensual
9 sodomy law. The statute prohibited oral and anal sex, whether 10 homosexual or heterosexual in nature. Only consensual sodomy
11 within the marital relationship was not deemed criminal by this 12 statute. Over the years the New York Legislature had consistently 13 refused to pass bills which would have decriminalized such 14 consensual conduct for the unmarried, thereby forcing individuals
15 to address their privacy arguments to the courts.

16           The Onofre court examined proffered state interests in 17 regulating private sexual conduct.

18           If the interest of the State is the general
19 promotion of morality, we are then required to accept on 20 faith the State's moral judgment. Equally important in 21 the community of man would seem to be some degree of 22 toleration of ideas and moral choices with which one
23 disagrees. The State may have a paternalistic interest
24 in protecting an individual from self-inflicted harm or 25 self-degrading experiences. This again presupposes the 26 validity of the state's judgment, and outright
27 proscription of certain activity can easily become 28 discriminatory governmental tyranny. Curtailing

1 activity which offends the public is a legitimate State
2 interest but the standard to be applied in such a case
3 is the effect that behavior might have on a reasonable
4 person, not the most sensitive member of the community.
5 Conduct which is carried on in an atmosphere of privacy
6 between two parties by mutual agreement has little 7 likelihood of offending a public not embarked on 8 eavesdropping. A State interest based upon the 9 prevention of physical violence and disorder fails for 10 the same reason. Sexual conduct with an unwilling
11 partner or one incapable of consent is proscribed by 12 other statutes. (Emphasis added.) Onofre, at page 4 of 13 slip opinion.

14 With respect to the recognition of a right to sexual privacy,
15 no better words can be found to conclude this section:

16 Personal sexual conduct is a fundamental right,
17 protected by the right to privacy because of the 18 transcendental importance of sex to the human condition,
19 the intimacy of the conduct, and its relationship to a
20 person's right to control his or her own body
21 (citation). This right is broad enough to include
22 sexual acts between non-married persons (citations) and 23 intimate consensual homosexual conduct (citation).
24 Onofre, at page 3 of the slip opinion.

25 //// ///
26 //// ///
27 //// ///
28 //// ///

1 IV(d)

2 California's Recognition of Sexual Privacy

3 Previous to 1970 most judicial statements in California
4 concerning privacy pertained to the law of torts. Tortious
5 invasions of privacy usually took one of four manifestations: (1)
6 the commercial appropriation of a person's name or likeness, (2)
7 intrusion on one's physical solitude or seclusion, (3) publicity
8 placing one in a false light in the public eye, and (4) public
9 disclosure of true embarrassing facts about a person.

10 The California Supreme Court recognized the Federal 11 Constitutional right to privacy in a lawsuit attacking the 12 constitutional validity of a statute requiring public disclosure
13 of the financial interests of candidates for public office. In 14 City of Carmel-by-the-Sea v. Young (1970) 2 Cal.3d 259, the Court
15 declared the statute unconstitutionally overbroad because it
16 intruded into both relevant and irrelevant private financial 17 affairs of numerous public officials and employees and was not
18 limited to only such holdings as might be affected by the duties
19 or functions of a particular public office. The Court held that a 20 government purpose to control or prevent activities which are 21 constitutionally subject to state regulation may not be achieved
22 by means which sweep unnecessarily broadly and thereby invade
23 protected freedoms. The Court then recognized that the right to 24 privacy is a basic right even though not expressly mentioned in 25 the Federal Constitution. The Court held that one's personal 26 financial affairs are protected by the right to privacy, stating:

27 [T]he right of privacy concerns one's feelings and 28 one's own peace of mind (citation omitted) and certainly

1 one's personal financial affairs are an essential part
2 of such peace of mind.<sup>65/</sup>

3 In November, 1972, California voters amended Article I,
4 Section 1 of the California Constitution to include among the 5 various inalienable rights of all people the right of privacy. As 6 reworded by further amendment in 1974, it now reads:

7 All people are by nature free and independent, and 8 have certain inalienable rights. Among these are 9 enjoying and defending life and liberty, acquiring,
10 possessing and protecting property, and pursuing and 11 obtaining safety, happiness, and privacy.

12 The argument in favor of the 1972 amendment stated:

13 The right of privacy is a right to be left alone.
14 It is a fundamental and compelling interest. It
15 protects our homes, our families, our thoughts, our 16 emotions, our expressions, our personalities, our 17 freedom of communion and our freedom to associate with 18 people we choose.<sup>66/</sup>

19 Although the primary motivation for the amendment was to give 20 Californians some protection against ever increasing electronic 21 surveillance and data collection activity, the Supreme Court noted
22 that "[T]he full contours of the new constitutional provision have 23 as yet not even tentatively been sketched. . ." <sup>67/</sup>

24 The elevation of the right to be free from privacy invasions
25 from mere tort law to constitutional status was apparently 26 intended to cause an expansion of the privacy right. Porten v.
27 University of San Francisco (1976) 64 Cal.App.3d 825, 829. The 28 1972 election brochure argument also stated:

1           The right to privacy is much more than 2 "unnecessary wordage." It is fundamental to any free
3 society. Privacy is not now guaranteed by our State
4 Constitution. This simple amendment will extend various 5 court decisions on privacy to insure protection of our 6 basic rights.<sup>68/</sup>

7           This new constitutional provision was self-executing and 8 needed no enabling legislation. It conferred a judicial right of 9 action on all Californians not only against government intrusions
10 but also against encroachments by private individuals.<sup>69/</sup>

11           Although this amendment to the State Constitution did not 12 directly address the issue of sexual privacy, it did set a tone
13 and a theme which would later influence all three branches of our 14 state government.

15           In 1973 the California Supreme Court did directly address the 16 issue of sexual privacy. People v. Triggs (1973) 8 Cal.3d 884, 17 dealt with clandestine observations by police officers of 18 unsuspecting users of men's restrooms. The Court unanimously
19 stated:

20           Most persons using public restrooms have no reason
21 to expect that a hidden agent of the state will observe
22 them. The expectation of privacy a person has when he 23 enters a restroom is reasonable and is not diminished or 24 destroyed because the toilet stall being used lacks a 25 door.

26           Reference to expectations of privacy as a Fourth
27 Amendment touchstone received the endorsement of the 28 United States Supreme Court in Katz v. United States

1 (1968) 389 U.S. 347, 88 S.Ct. 507, 19 L.Ed.2d 576.
2 Viewed in the light of Katz, the standard for 3 determining what is an illegal search is whether 4 defendant's "reasonable expectation of privacy was 5 violated by unreasonable governmental intrusion."<sup>70/</sup>

6 The Court specifically based its decision in Triggs on the 7 Fourth Amendment to the United States Constitution and on Article
8 I, Section 19 of the State Constitution, recognizing that under 9 the State Constitution, the Court retains the power to impose
10 higher standards on searches and seizures than required by the 11 Federal Constitution.<sup>71/</sup> Article I, Section 19 contains a 12 "guarantee of personal privacy" against unreasonable searches or 13 seizures.<sup>72/</sup>

14 In 1975 the California Legislature voted to decriminalize
15 private sexual conduct between consenting adults by repealing
16 prohibitions against consensual sodomy, oral copulation, and 17 adulterous cohabitation. The "Consenting Adults Act" or the 18 so-called "Brown Bill" (named after Assembly Willie Brown (D/San 19 Francisco)) became effective on January 1, 1976.<sup>73/</sup> This 20 manifested a major philosophical change and a legal recognition
21 that the state has no business regulating the private morals and 22 private lives of its adult residents in matters of consensual
23 sexual behavior. Later, it would be seen that the "Consenting 24 Adults Act" created two major inconsistencies in the state's penal 25 law.<sup>74/</sup>

26 In 1976 the California Court of Appeal granted injunctive
27 relief against a policy regulation of a local housing authority
28 which prohibited rentals to unmarried cohabitators of the opposite

1 sex. The court in Atkisson v. Kern County Housing Authority
2 (1976) 59 Cal.App.3d 89, stated:

3 The section X.A. policy regulation with which we
4 are concerned automatically presumes immorality,
5 irresponsibility and the demoralization of tenant
6 relations from the fact of unmarried cohabitation. Such 7 presumptions are not necessarily universally true in 8 fact. As such the policy creates an unconstitutional
9 irrebutable presumption and must be held to be invalid
10 denial of due process.

11 The court then discussed cases such as Griswold and 12 Eisenstadt regarding the right to privacy. It noted that the ban
13 against unmarried cohabiting adults was not merely a regulation
14 but a total prohibition. As such, the court held, the "ban 15 contravenes the principles laid down in the above cases and is an 16 invalid infringement of the right of privacy." Atkisson, supra,
17 at 98.

18 Last year Edmund G. Brown Jr., Governor of California, issued
19 Executive Order B-54-79, prohibiting administrative agencies under 20 the jurisdiction of the Governor from discriminating in state
21 employment against any individual solely upon the individual's 22 sexual preference. The primary premise for this order was that 23 "Article I of the California Constitution guarantees the 24 inalienable right of privacy for all people which must be 25 vigorously enforced. . ." <sup>75/</sup> This placed the Executive Branch in 26 congruence with the Legislature and Judiciary in recognizing the 27 right to sexual privacy in California as a basic right entitled to 28 special protection.

1           Also last year the California Supreme Court strictly
2 scrutinized subdivision (a) of Section 647 which prohibits a
3 person, while in a public place, from soliciting or engaging in 4 lewd or dissolute conduct. Much can be learned from Pryor v.
5 Municipal Court (1979) 25 Cal.3d 238, regarding a method of 6 analyzing the scope and constitutionality of subdivision (b) of 7 the same section of the Penal Code.

8           In Pryor the petitioner raised several questions concerning 9 the definition of words, freedom of speech, constitutional
10 vagueness and overbreadth, and inconsistency with recent 11 legislative enactments, many of which are the same legal issues
12 involved in the instant case. While an identical approach may not 13 be appropriate for an analysis of the defects of subdivision (b),
14 the basic analytical approach of Pryor should prove to be helpful.

15           At this juncture only the privacy aspects of the Pryor
16 decision will be reviewed. The Supreme Court took notice of the 17 passage of the "Consenting Adults Act" and attempted to reconcile 18 any inconsistencies between that act and subdivision (a) of 19 Section 647. In order to so reconcile and in order to avoid First 20 Amendment problems, the Court overruled two previous appellate 21 decisions which held that public solicitation of private sexual 22 conduct was prohibited by 647(a).<sup>76/</sup> "[W]e conclude that Mesa and 23 Dudley are inconsistent with the protection of private conduct 24 afforded by the Brown Act and are no longer viable. . ." Pryor at 25 page 254. Furthermore, the Court held that for purposes of 26 Section 647(a), some places would no longer be considered "open to 27 the public" thus recognizing privacy protection for sexual 28 activity conducted within their confines.

1            In re Steinke, supra, which involved sexual acts in
2 a closed room in a massage parlor, suggested that a
3 closed room made available to different members of the 4 public as successive intervals was a place "open to the 5 public" under section 647, subdivision (a). (See 2
6 Cal.App.3d at p. 576, 82 Cal.Rptr. 789; People v.
7 Freeman (1977) 66 Cal.App.3d 424, 428-429, 136 Cal.Rptr.
8 76.) We do not endorse that interpretation, which would 9 render a fully enclosed toilet booth (cf. Bieliaki v.
10 Superior Court (1962) 57 Cal.2d 602, 21 Cal.Rptr. 552,
11 371 P.2d 288), a hotel room (cf. Stoner v. California
12 (1964) 376 U.S. 483, 84 S.Ct. 889, 11 L.Ed.2d 856), or 13 even an apartment a place "open to the public" under 14 this section. Pryor, at page 256, footnote 12.

15            The voters have recognized a right to privacy by amending the 16 State Constitution. The Legislature acted in furtherance of this 17 right when it decriminalized most forms of private sexual behavior
18 between consenting adults. The Governor built upon this 19 foundation when he issued an executive order prohibiting sexual 20 orientation discrimination. The Supreme Court has declared
21 statutes unconstitutional when they infringed on certain privacy
22 rights; it has recognized another privacy protection in yet
23 another section of the California Constitution which protects all 24 persons against unreasonable searches or seizures; and it has 25 attempted to harmonize statutes which apparently conflicted with 26 these recognized privacy rights.

27            It is thus abundantly clear that this state has a 28 comprehensive policy of protecting sexual conduct in private. The

1 prohibition against sexual conduct in private when money or other
2 consideration is involved seems to be inconsistent with this
3 pervasive policy, and, for that reason, Section 647, subdivision
4 (b) needs to be carefully scrutinized by the courts.

5 The following pages will deal with specific legal defects in 6 the prostitution statute and suggestions for remedying those 7 defects.

8	////	///
9	////	///
10	////	///
11	////	///
12	////	///
13	////	///
14	////	///
15	////	///
16	////	///
17	////	///
18	////	///
19	////	///
20	////	///
21	////	///
22	////	///
23	////	///
24	////	///
25	////	///
26	////	///
27	////	///
28	////	///

LEGAL ISSUES PRESENTED

- 1
2
3 1. Is private sexual conduct between consenting adults protected
4 by the right to privacy under the State and Federal
5 Constitutions?
- 6 2. What level of scrutiny should be used to determine the 7 constitutionality of a statute regulating such private sexual 8 conduct?
- 9 3. Is Section 647(b) unconstitutionally overbroad in violation
10 of the right to privacy in that it prohibits all 11 procreational, therapeutic, and recreational sex merely 12 because money or other consideration is involved?
- 13 4. Does Section 647(b) violate the Due Process and Privacy
14 Clauses of the State or Federal Constitutions because it
15 infringes on the Freedom of Choice of individuals to 16 privately offer money or other consideration in order to 17 receive the amount or kind of sexual services that individual 18 desires?
- 19 5. What compelling state interest justifies the total 20 prohibition of such private sexual conduct merely because 21 money or other consideration is involved?
- 22 6. Is Section 647(b) unconstitutionally vague because it fails 23 to properly define prostitution when it uses such language as 24 "any lewd act" or "other consideration"?
- 25 7. If some or all forms of private sex for money or other
26 consideration are constitutionally protected, does Section
27 647(b) violate the free speech clauses of the State or 28 Federal Constitutions because it appears to prohibit private

1 and nonoffensive speech as well as public and offensive
2 accosting and soliciting?

3 8. Can the scope of Section 647(b) be narrowed by the courts so
4 that it is harmonized with the state policy protecting sexual 5 privacy as well as avoiding constitutional problems of 6 vagueness and overbreadth?

7	////	///
8	////	///
9	////	///
10	////	///
11	////	///
12	////	///
13	////	///
14	////	///
15	////	///
16	////	///
17	////	///
18	////	///
19	////	///
20	////	///
21	////	///
22	////	///
23	////	///
24	////	///
25	////	///
26	////	///
27	////	///
28	////	///

1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19
20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28

VI
ISSUE 1
PRIVATE SEXUAL CONDUCT BETWEEN CONSENTING ADULTS IS PROTECTED
BY THE RIGHT TO PRIVACY
UNDER THE STATE AND FEDERAL CONSTITUTIONS

Although the right to privacy, which has been recognized by the United States Supreme Court to be implicit in the concept of ordered liberty, has not been specifically held in California to protect consenting adult sexual relations (see Carey, supra), several state and federal courts have made such a holding. It is entirely consistent, however, with California's legislative, judicial, executive, and constitutional mandates for our state courts to follow the precedents mentioned in earlier sections of this brief and, like the most recent pronouncement on the subject by a state court, to acknowledge that:

Personal sexual conduct is a fundamental right protected by the right to privacy because of the transcendental importance of sex to the human condition, the intimacy of the conduct, and its relationship to a person's right to control his or her own body. Onofre, supra, at page 3 of the slip opinion.

Furthermore, since our State Constitution has a specific provision which lists privacy as an inalienable right, the California courts should hold that personal sexual conduct is specifically protected by Article I, Section 1 of the California Constitution. There already exists a state policy protecting

1 sexual privacy, as evidenced by recent developments in California,
2 e.g., passage of the "Consenting Adults Act" by the Legislature,
3 issuance of an Executive Order on Sexual Orientation
4 Discrimination by the Governor, and holdings by the California
5 Supreme Court and other appellate courts in this state (Triggs,
6 Fryor, Atkisson, supra). Our courts should simply recognize that 7 this policy is primarily founded in Article I, Section 1 -- the 8 right to secure happiness and privacy.

9	////	///
10	////	///
11	////	///
12	////	///
13	////	///
14	////	///
15	////	///
16	////	///
17	////	///
18	////	///
19	////	///
20	////	///
21	////	///
22	////	///
23	////	///
24	////	///
25	////	///
26	////	///
27	////	///
28	////	///

1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19
20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28

VII
ISSUE 2
REGULATION OF PRIVATE SEXUAL CONDUCT
SHOULD BE STRICTLY SCRUTINIZED
BY THE COURTS AND SHOULD BE VOIDED
ABSENT A SHOWING THAT THERE IS A COMPELLING STATE INTEREST FOR THEIR RETENTION

Whenever a statute directly infringes upon a fundamental right adhering in the individual which right is guaranteed either explicitly in the Constitution (privacy) or implicitly by the development of constitutional doctrine, that statute is subject to strict scrutiny. Since Section 647(b) prohibits consenting adult sexual behavior in private, it directly affects the fundamental right to privacy as contained in Article I, Section 1 of the State Constitution, the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution, and the Due Process Clause of the California Constitution. As a result, California law is clear that Penal Code Section 647(b) must be strictly scrutinized, and the engaging portion of that statute must be declared unconstitutional as applied to private sexual conduct, unless the People can demonstrate (1) a compelling state interest in such a total prohibition and (2) that the engaging portion is narrowly drawn to achieve a legitimate interest. Cotton v. Municipal Court (1976) 59 Cal.App.3d 601; Paying v. Superior Court (1976) 17 Cal.3d 908; Spencer v. G.A. MacDonald Construction Co. (1976) 63 Cal.App.3d 836; Serrano v. Priest (1976) 18 Cal.3d 728; Gray v. Whitmore (1971) 17 Cal.App.3d 1; Weber v. City Council of Thousand Oaks (1973) 9 Cal.3d 950; Reece v. Alcoholic Beverage Control

1 Board (1976) 64 Cal.App.3d 675; In re Ahmed's Adoption (1975) 44
2 Cal.App.3d 810; D'Amico v. Board of Medical Examiners (1974) 11
3 Cal.3d 1.

4 Where the government restriction is designed to regulate
5 "socially evil conduct" which creates only an indirect tension
6 with a fundamental right, the restriction will fail unless: (1)
7 it is within the constitutional power of the government; (2) it
8 furthers an important or substantial government interest; (3) the 9 government interest is unrelated to the suppression of free
10 expression; and (4) if the incidental restriction on alleged 11 constitutional protections is no greater than is essential to the 12 furtherance of that interest. People ex rel. Van de Kamp v.
13 American Art, supra, at 530.

14 Finally, even where a law does not directly or indirectly
15 infringe on fundamental rights, it will still be declared
16 unconstitutional in violation of Due Process if it is based upon 17 false premises, i.e., if it is arbitrary and irrational.

18 The engaging portion of Section 647(b) prohibits all acts of 19 sexual intercourse in private for money or other consideration.
20 The soliciting portion prohibits all attempts to secure consent to 21 engage in such conduct, whether the request is in public or in 22 private, whether offensive or discreet. Such a total prohibition 23 results in a direct or, at least, an indirect infringement on the 24 right to sexual privacy. Therefore, the People must show what 25 compelling or substantial government interests require such a
26 broad statute.

27 ////

///

28 ////

///

1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19
20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28

VIII
ISSUE 3

THE ENGAGING PORTION OF SECTION 647(b)
IS OVERBROAD AND VIOLATES
THE RIGHT TO PRIVACY BECAUSE IT TOTALLY PROHIBITS SEXUAL CONDUCT
MERELY BECAUSE MONEY
OR OTHER CONSIDERATION IS INVOLVED

Section 647(b) prohibits engaging in any act of prostitution.
"Prostitution" is defined as sexual intercourse for hire or any lewd act for money or other consideration. All forms of sexual conduct, whether procreational, therapeutic, or recreational, are prohibited merely because money or other consideration is somehow injected into the relationship of the participants.

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

//// //

VIII(a)

Procreational Sex Should be Protected

Procreational sex for money is outlawed by Section 647(b). In his dissenting opinion in the case of Fournier v. Lopez (attached with the exhibits for judicial notice by the Court), Court of Appeal Justice Parrish writes:

The question is, may two people strike an enforceable bargain that if they have a baby, that between themselves, only one will be financially responsible for the child's upbringing?

The majority say no because the agreement was based upon an "illicit consideration of meretricious sexual services." (Marvin v. Marvin (1976) 18 Cal.3d 660, 671, 672, 674, 683, 684.) They contend this was an agreement for prostitution. (Marvin at pp. 674, 686).

Meretricious sex and prostitution are synonymous terms.

Penal Code section 647, subdivision (b) proscribes prostitution. But to describe either the father, the mother or both in this case as a prostitute(s) is completely gratuitous.

This was not a contract in aid of prostitution, it was an agreement in aid of procreation and as such cannot be deemed unenforceable as against public policy. Fournier, at page 6 of the slip opinion.

Section 647(b) is overbroad and violates the right to privacy in its prohibition of procreational sex for a consideration.

////

///

////

///

VIII(b)

Therapeutic Sex for a Consideration
Should be Constitutionally Protected

1
2
3
4 Do single individuals have the same rights to sexual
5 expression as married people? This question raises the 6 controversial and often misunderstood subject of sex surrogates.
7 For if the answer to this question is in the affirmative, then sex
8 surrogates would be necessary in order to include single 9 individuals in sex therapy when these individuals are unable to 10 supply a suitable partner. The use of sex surrogates raises
11 moral, ethical, professional, and legal problems that usually 12 accompany such progressive techniques or ideas. Essential to a 13 resolution of the conflicting considerations inherent in these 14 issues is an understanding of this unique form of therapy.

15 SEX SURROGATE THERAPY:

16 The therapy, as described by Ms. Barbara M. Roberts, begins
17 with sensate focus exercises.<sup>77/</sup> This is a procedure of touching
18 which helps the client become in touch with his body. This 19 program includes touching exercises focusing upon various parts of 20 the body. Touching of genitals is not made an essential part of 21 this experience since much anxiety is usually focused there.<sup>78/</sup>
22 The general intent of this program is to sensitize the client's
23 entire body. The exercises may include showering together but 24 they are not specifically designed to be erotic. Rather, they are 25 aimed at making the client aware of the sensation of touch.<sup>79/</sup>

26 It should be kept in mind that the use of sex surrogates is 27 supervised by a sex therapist. A common misconception is that 28 surrogate partner therapy is an entity unto itself -- separate and

1 distinct from other forms of therapy. In reality, sex surrogate
2 therapy is only a variation of sex therapy.<sup>80/</sup> Ms. Roberts
3 describes the role of the therapist as follows:

4 Not only is the physical contact between the client
5 and the surrogate part of the written or verbal contract
6 of therapy, but it is constantly being monitored by the 7 therapist. An integral part of surrogate partner
8 therapy is the fact that feelings on the part of either 9 the client or the surrogate regarding physical and 10 emotional intimacy are discussed openly with the 11 therapist. A third person thereby takes responsibility
12 for the using and handling transference.<sup>81/</sup>

13 Consultations between the surrogate and the therapist take 14 place before each session during which the therapist will suggest 15 what form the therapy is to take. Subsequent to each session of 16 therapy, feedback sessions are conducted to enable the therapist
17 to resolve differences of opinion, misunderstandings, and tensions
18 between client and surrogate.

19 It becomes apparent upon a review of the sex surrogate
20 therapy, that sex, as the word is commonly understood, is the 21 least part of the therapy. If intercourse does take place, it is 22 because the therapist has suggested it for a specific therapeutic
23 purpose.<sup>82/</sup>

24 THE NEED FOR SEX SURROGATE THERAPY

25 The need for this type of therapy should be beyond question
26 in light of the fact that "sexual inadequacy makes psychic
27 invalids of thousands, more likely tens of thousands of Americans 28 each year and fractures or disrupts countless marriages."<sup>83/</sup> The

1 treatment is usually successful to the point that in the twenty
2 percent (20%) of the cases where the major symptoms are not
3 completely eliminated, most patients reported less sexual stress,
4 improved family relationships, or other significant benefits.<sup>84/</sup>

5       When asked about the rationale justifying the use of sex
6 surrogates, noted authority, Dr. William H. Masters, stated that 7 he considered a single, sexually dysfunctional male a "social 8 cripple."<sup>85/</sup> "Does society want them treated?" he asked. "If 9 they are not treated, it is a discrimination of one segment of 10 society over another."<sup>86/</sup>

11       The need for this type of therapy is further illustrated by 12 statistical information which indicates the poor results of 13 therapy administered to individuals without partners.

14       This situation has involved basic administrative
15 and procedural decisions. Should the best possible
16 climate for full return of therapeutic effort be created
17 for the incredibly vulnerable unmarried males referred 18 for constitution or reconstitution of sexual functions;
19 or should there be professional concession to the mores
20 of society, with full knowledge that if a decision to 21 dodge the issue was made, a significant increase in 22 percentage of therapeutic failures must be anticipated
23 . . . It would have been inexcusable to accept referral
24 of unmarried men and women and then give them
25 statistically less than 25% chance of reversal of their
26 dysfunctional status by treating them as individuals
27 without partners.<sup>87/</sup>

28       One commentator has suggested that this therapy is necessary

1 because "if single clients are not treated for sexual dysfunction,
2 personal alienation will increase and cause further weakening of 3 the social fibre."<sup>88/</sup>

4 POTENTIAL CRIMINAL LIABILITY

5 Laws proscribing prostitution usually prohibit the acts of 6 hiring or attempting to hire a woman to engage in sexual conduct
7 with another person. Although surrogate therapy occurs in a
8 supervised medical environment, all or most of the participants
9 may have committed offenses under the laws against prostitution.
10 The potential for liability under various statutes has created 11 problems in administering the therapy since the surrogate may 12 insist on receiving the fee from the therapist. Similarly, the 13 therapist may be reluctant to do this, fearing "legal accusation
14 of pimping and the professional accusation of unethical
15 practice."<sup>89/</sup> If the therapist is not willing to actually pay the 16 fee to the surrogate there is a resultant negative effect upon the 17 therapy: "The surrogate is objectified and the client is given 18 the impression that the sexual part of his therapy is separate 19 from the core of therapy."<sup>90/</sup>

20 Specific forms of liability may be divided into various 21 categories. The first and most obvious is the category of 22 prostitution. A surrogate who offers services for money could be 23 punishable as a female prostitute. Some statutes, including 24 California's, are broad enough to impose similar liability for 25 male surrogates.<sup>91/</sup> Under statutes where employment or 26 supervision is sufficient involvement, persons involved in 27 administering therapy could be in violation of pandering and 28 procuring statutes<sup>92/</sup> by providing said surrogates to clients.

1 Sex clinic personnel may also be subject to the laws proscribing
2 pimping, as they may be deemed as persons soliciting persons to
3 become customers for prostitutes.<sup>93/</sup>

4 The question is thus presented: Do the statutes prohibiting
5 the above-described conduct apply to surrogate therapy? A two 6 part test to determine the answer to this question has been 7 suggested: "The enactment of penal laws requires an initial
8 policy determination as to (1) those social and individual
9 interests which should be protected by the criminal processes, and 10 (2) the kinds of conduct that should be proscribed."<sup>94/</sup> It is 11 submitted that "our society has such a desperate need for this 12 type of treatment for both single and married persons that it
13 cannot afford to consider valid sexual therapy as an illegal act
14 . . . Therapeutic intercourse in the sex clinic context must be 15 considered a remedial necessity in American society, not an act of 16 prostitution for which penal discouragement is needed."<sup>95/</sup>

17	////	///
18	////	///
19	////	///
20	////	///
21	////	///
22	////	///
23	////	///
24	////	///
25	////	///
26	////	///
27	////	///
28	////	///

VIII(c)

Recreational Sex for Money

Should Not be Prohibited

1
2
3
4 Not only procreational, and theraputic sex for money or other
5 consideration should be constitutionally protected by the right to 6 privacy, but so should sexual activity which is purely
7 recreational. As Judge Margaret Taylor stated in her excellent
8 opinion on the constitutionality of New York's prostitution law,
9 "However offensive it may be, recreational commercial sex
10 threatens no harm to the public health, safety, or welfare and,
11 therefore, may not be proscribed." In re P (1977) 400 N.Y.S.2d
12 455, 468.

13 The California Legislature has decriminalized recreational
14 sex in private between consenting adults when no money or other
15 consideration is involved. Why should such sex be prohibited
16 merely because some consideration is involved?

17 Obviously the engaging portion of Section 647(b) is not a
18 regulatory but a prohibitory statute whereby no sexual activity
19 may be engaged in for any consideration. There is no limitation 20 on the proscription by age, sex, or relationship of the 21 participants.

22 As the Court stated in Galyon v. Municipal Court (1964) 40
23 Cal.Rptr. 446, at 449:

24 Thus the question is forthrightly presented: is it
25 a proper exercise of the police power of the state to 26 prohibit an act for hire which is not so prohibited for 27 non-hire?

28 The Galyon Court noted that the underlying conduct was not

1 the basis for the prohibition since there was no statute
2 proscribing it. Only when the conduct in question was done for 3 hire was it made illegal.

4 When Section 647(b) was first enacted in 1961 and when the 5 subsequent amendments were made in 1965 and 1969, many forms of 6 private sex were illegal. Since the underlying conduct was often
7 illegal, even when done purely and only out of love, there was no
8 inconsistency in also making it illegal when done for money.

9 A statute valid when enacted may become invalid by a change
10 in the conditions to which it is applied. Nashville, C. & St. L.
11 Ry. v. Walters (1935) 55 S.Ct. 486; Smith v. Illinois Bell
12 Telephone Co. (1930) 51 S.Ct. 65.

13 "A change of conditions may invalidate a statute which was 14 reasonable and valid when enacted. (Citation) Also, due weight
15 must be given to new and changed conditions (citations)." Galyon,
16 supra, at 449. Taking a fresh look at the statute, the Court in 17 Galyon declared a statute to be unconstitutional which prohibited
18 the exhibition of one's own deformities or the deformities of 19 another for hire.

20 Unlike the circumstances surrounding Pryor v. Municipal 21 Court, supra, wherein the California Supreme Court felt compelled 22 to overturn nearly 75 years of judicial precedent on the 23 constitutionality of Section 647(a) before it could take a fresh 24 look at the statute because of change in circumstances (passage of 25 consenting adults act), there are no court cases as precedents
26 which have to be overturned on the constitutional issues presented
27 in this brief.

28 Although the engaging portion of Section 647(b) is broad

1 enough to prohibit theraputic and procreational sex for money, the
2 law is usually not enforced against such conduct. Section 647(b)
3 is most often used to prohibit recreational sex for money. A
4 study regarding enforcement of this statute in Los Angeles is 5 attached to this brief as an exhibit and the Court is asked to 6 take judicial notice of it. Se Coleman, Wendt, and Schrader,
7 "Enforcement of Section 647(b) of the California Penal Code by the 8 Los Angeles Police Department -- Prostitution and the Police,"
9 privately published in 1973 by the National Committee for Sexual 10 Civil Liberties. That study shows that the engaging portion of 11 Section 647(b) is virtually a dead letter. A more recent study in 12 San Francisco shows that 95 percent of all arrests under Section 13 647(b) are for solicitation rather than acts of prostitution. See 14 Jennings, "The Victim as Criminal: Consideration of California's 15 Prostitution Law," 65 Cal.Law.Rev. 1235, 1248, footnote 79 (1976).

16 Although the sodomy laws were virtually never enforced and 17 were practically unenforceable against private sexual acts of 18 consenting adults, this did not hinder courts from declaring those 19 laws unconstitutional (see earlier sections of this brief).

20 In order to enforce the engaging portion against private
21 recreational sexual conduct for money, the police would either
22 have to become accomplices (see People v. Norris, supra, where the 23 court held that both participants in the conduct would be 24 accomplices) or would have to violate the reasonable expectation 25 of privacy of the participants by surreptitious surveillance in 26 violation of other constitutional protections (see People v.
27 Triggs, supra).

28 Therefore, because (1) private sex not involving

1 consideration has been decriminalized, (2) enforcement of the 2 engaging portion would require the police to engage in illegal
3 activity themselves, and (3) most importantly because personal
4 sexual relations are constitutionally protected, California courts
5 should not hesitate to declare the engaging portion of Penal Code
6 Section 647(b) unconstitutional.

7	////	///
8	////	///
9	////	///
10	////	///
11	////	///
12	////	///
13	////	///
14	////	///
15	////	///
16	////	///
17	////	///
18	////	///
19	////	///
20	////	///
21	////	///
22	////	///
23	////	///
24	////	///
25	////	///
26	////	///
27	////	///
28	////	///

1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19
20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28

IX

ISSUE 4

SECTION 647(b) VIOLATES DUE PROCESS
AS WELL AS THE RIGHT TO PRIVACY
BECAUSE IT INFRINGES ON THE RIGHT OF INDIVIDUALS TO PRIVATELY
OFFER MONEY IN ORDER TO RECEIVE
THE AMOUNT OR KIND OF SEXUAL SERVICES THEY DESIRE

Many men choose to use prostitutes. Whether the prostitute is a male or a female, it is common knowledge that in the overwhelming number of cases, it is males who are the customers. These men have the right to engage in sexual relations in private by virtue of the "Consenting Adults Act" and the constitutional right to privacy. They have the right to publicly make a request of another person to engage in sexual relations in private. Fryor, supra. They have the right to engage in sexual relations in places that might technically be considered public so long as no one is present who may be offended.

For a variety of reasons, many men either cannot, or feel they cannot, receive the amount or kind of sexual activity unless they pay some consideration to their proposed sexual partner. This right of sexual privacy is a hollow right for such men unless they are granted to corresponding right to privately and discreetly offer money or other consideration for sexual services.

Why do men go to prostitutes and what role do prostitutes play in the lives of men?

First of all, men go to prostitutes because they

1 have insufficient sexual outlets in other directions, or
2 because prostitution provides types of sexual activity
3 which are not so readily available elsewhere. Many men
4 go to prostitutes to find the variety that sexual
5 experience with a new partner may offer. Some men go
6 because they feel that the danger of contracting
7 venereal disease from a prostitute is actually less than 8 it would be with a girl who was not in an organized 9 house of prostitution. Some males experiment with 10 prostitution just to discover what it means. In many 11 cases some social psychology is involved as groups of 12 males go together to look for prostitutes.

13 At all social levels men go to prostitutes because 14 it is simpler to secure a sexual partner commercially
15 than it is to secure a sexual partner by courting a girl
16 who would not accept pay. Even at lower social levels,
17 where most males find it remarkably simple to make 18 frequent contacts with girls who are not prostitutes,
19 there are still occasions when they desire intercourse
20 immediately and find it much simpler to obtain it from a
21 prostitute. As for college-bred males, a great majority
22 of them are utterly ineffective in securing intercourse
23 from any girl whom they have not dated for long periods
24 of time and at considerable expense; and in some cases,
25 their only chance to secure coital experience is with a 26 prostitute. This is, of course, particularly true if 27 the male is away from home in a strange town.

28 Hundreds of males have insisted that intercourse

1 with a prostitute is cheaper than intercourse with any
2 other girl. The cost of dating a girl, especially at 3 the upper social level, may mount considerably through 4 the weeks and months, or even years, that it may take to 5 arrive at the first intercourse. There are flowers,
6 candy, "coke dates," dinner engagements, parties,
7 evening entertainments, moving pictures, theatres, night
8 clubs, dances, picnics, week-end house parties, car
9 rides, longer trips, and all sorts of other expensive
10 entertainment to be paid for, and gifts to be made to 11 the girl on her birthday, at Christmas, and on 12 innumerable other special occasions. Finally, after all 13 this the girl may break off the whole affair as soon as 14 she realizes that the male is interested in intercourse.
15 Before the recent war the average cost of a sexual 16 relation with a prostitute was one to five dollars.
17 This was less than the cost of a single supper date with 18 a girl who was not a prostitute; and even at the 19 inflated prices of prostitution which prevailed during 20 the war, the cost did not amount to more than many a
21 soldier or sailor was obliged to spend on another girl
22 from whom he might or might not be able to obtain the 23 intercourse which he wanted.

24 Men go to prostitutes because they can pay for the 25 sexual relations and forget other responsibilities,
26 whereas coitus with other girls may involve them
27 socially and legally beyond anything which they care to 28 undertake.

1           Men go to prostitutes to obtain types of sexual
2 activity which they are unable to obtain easily
3 elsewhere. Few prostitutes offer any variety of sexual
4 techniques, but many of them do provide mouth-genital
5 contacts. The prostitute offers the readiest source of 6 experience for the sadist or the masochist, and for 7 persons who have developed associations with non-sexual 8 objects (fetishes) which have come to have sexual 9 significance for them because of some contact they have 10 had in the past. Most males who have participated in 11 sexual activities in groups have found the opportunity
12 to do so with prostitutes. Nearly all of the 13 opportunity that males have to observe sexual activity
14 is connected with prostitutes, and such experiences are 15 in the history of many more persons than is ordinarily 16 realized.

17           Some men go to prostitutes because they are more or 18 less ineffective in securing sexual relations with other
19 girls. This may be true of males who are unusually 20 timid. Persons who are deformed physically, deaf,
21 blind, severely crippled, spastic, or otherwise
22 handicapped, often have considerable difficulty in 23 finding heterosexual coitus. The matter may weigh 24 heavily upon their minds and cause considerable psychic
25 disturbance. There are instances where prostitutes have 26 contributed to establishing these individuals in their 27 own self esteem by providing their first sexual 28 contacts.

1           Finally, at the lower social levels there are
2 persons who are feeble-minded, physically deformed, and
3 so repulsive and offensive physically that no girl
4 except a prostitute would have intercourse with them.
5 Without such outlets, these individuals would become 6 even more serious social problems than they already are.
7 Kinsey, "Significance of Prostitution," Sexual Behavior
8 in the Human Male, p. 606-608, W.B. Saunders Company, 9 1948.

10          The men who choose to offer money or other consideration to 11 obtain sexual satisfaction of a kind they are seeking are usually 12 30 to 60 years old.<sup>96/</sup>

13          The courts would not hesitate to invalidate a statute which 14 expressly granted sexual privacy rights to those who were young, 15 physically attractive, or psychologically aggressive but which 16 denied those rights to persons who were old, unattractive, or 17 otherwise physically or psychologically impaired in their ability
18 to find sexual partners. Yet this is what is done de facto by 19 decriminalizing private sex only when no consideration is 20 involved.

21          Section 647(b) violates the constitutional protections of 22 "life" and "liberty" of Article I, Section 7 of the State
23 Constitution, "pursuit of happiness" and "privacy" of Article I,
24 Section 1 of that Constitution, and the Due Process Clause of the 25 United States Constitution by infringing on the right of these men 26 to privately and discreetly offer some consideration in order to 27 receive the amount or kind of sexual satisfaction they desire.

28          Even for those who simply want to shortcut achieving their

1 sexual goal by paying hard cash immediately rather than paying for 2 wine, food, and entertainment over a prolonged period of time, the 3 law should protect their right to sexual privacy and the pursuit
4 of happiness. In both cases, the motivation is often the same --
5 companionship, human closeness, and sex, often with very little
6 importance given to ultimate love, marriage, or long-term
7 relationship -- and the interest of the state to become involved
8 in the private lives of its citizens to the extent that it
9 proscribes this behavior is neither rational nor defensible.

10	////	///
11	////	///
12	////	///
13	////	///
14	////	///
15	////	///
16	////	///
17	////	///
18	////	///
19	////	///
20	////	///
21	////	///
22	////	///
23	////	///
24	////	///
25	////	///
26	////	///
27	////	///
28	////	///

1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19
20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28

X

ISSUE 5

THERE IS NO COMPELLING STATE INTEREST
OR EVEN RATIONAL BASIS
FOR A TOTAL PROHIBITION OF PRIVATE SEXUAL CONDUCT MERELY BECAUSE MONEY OR OTHER CONSIDERATION IS OFFERED

"That one may not be deprived of 'life, liberty, or property without due process of law' has traditionally meant that one may not be deprived arbitrarily of the same . . . But if no set principles are used in defining criminal conduct, if criminality is determined solely by undefinable, constantly changing public notions of morality, is this not an arbitrary imposition of punishment and deprivation of liberty without due process of law?

"If due process is to have any meaning at all as a check on the police power, its protection must extend to the very heart of the criminal system and first and foremost provide constitutional limits on what conduct may be declared criminal." Caughey, "Note: Criminal Law -- The Principal of Harm and its Application to Laws Criminalizing Prostitution," 51 Denver L. Journal 235, 242 (1974).

This aforementioned law review article will be of great assistance in analyzing the constitutionality of Section 647(b). The full article is attached under separate cover as an exhibit and the Court is requested to take judicial notice of it.

Propositions about criminal law may be divided into three categories: Principles, rules, and doctrines. Those which are universally applicable to all crimes are the principles. These principles consist of seven notions: (1) mens rea, (2) act, (3)

1 the concurrence of act and mens rea, (4) harm, (5) causation, (6)
2 punishment, and (7) legality. Except for "punishment" and 3 "legality" these principles refer to essential elements of crime.

4 The principle of harm has been largely ignored -- especially 5 by American jurisprudence. This principle should be one of the 6 primary limitations on the power of the government to make conduct
7 criminal.

8 The real purpose of Section 647(b) is to regulate morality.
9 That has traditionally been the purpose of statutes prohibiting
10 sex for hire or "being a common prostitute." These laws were used 11 almost exclusively against "loose women" regardless of whether 12 their promiscuity involved money or not.

13 The real issue is: When can the government's general
14 authority to regulate public morality (as opposed to private 15 morality) be exercised without transgressing constitutional norms?
16 The answer should be that morals may be regulated by means of the 17 criminal sanction when, and only when, a breach of the moral code
18 would imminently cause a cognizable harm to a legally protected
19 interest of another." Caughey, "The Principle of Harm, supra, at 20 page 243.

21 If conduct is to be punishable, in order to satisfy Due
22 Process, it must satisfy the four elements of legal harm: (1) a
23 factually demonstrable (2) invasion of a legally protected
24 interest (3) of another (4) imminently caused by such conduct.

25 The alleged harms associated with private sex for money are:
26 (1) it provides an opportunity for ancillary crimes (i.e., 27 robbery, assault, murder), (2) it encourages organized crime, (3)
28 it is a significant factor in the spread of venereal disease, and

1 (4) it contributes to the destruction of public morals.

2 The following pages will delve into the facts and statistics
3 concerning these alleged harms. Rather than "reinventing the 4 wheel" a portion of Judge Charles Halleck's scholarly opinion will
5 be set forth from the case of United States v. Moses, Superior
6 Court of the District of Columbia, Criminal Division, Case No.
7 17778-72, filed November 3, 1972. This is one of the finest
8 examinations of the harms associated with prostitution that could 9 be found. The Court should also read the opinion of Judge
10 Margaret Taylor in the case of In re P, supra, which also contains 11 an excellent discourse on this subject. Certain other relevant 12 law review articles are also attached under separate cover and the 13 Court is requested to take judicial notice of them.<sup>97/</sup>

14	////	///
15	////	///
16	////	///
17	////	///
18	////	///
19	////	///
20	////	///
21	////	///
22	////	///
23	////	///
24	////	///
25	////	///
26	////	///
27	////	///
28	////	///

1 X(a)

2 An Examination of the "Harms"

3 Excerpted from U.S. v. Moses

4 VENEREAL DISEASE:

5 The lore of the harms occasioned by prostitution is as 6 pervasive in our culture as it is unsubstantiated by hard data.
7 Indeed, as Jerome Skolnick has said of this area of legislation,
8 "rather than fact determining policy, policy decides fact."<sup>98/</sup>

9 Nowhere does this assessment seem more apposite than in the 10 alleged threat posed to community health by prostitution. Even 11 prescindng from the argument that it is a citizen's right to 12 choose not to protect his own health, we are still cited to 13 nothing which supports the proposition that sexual relations
14 between prostitutes and their clients pose any unique threat to the 15 health and well-being of either party. Over a decade ago, it was 16 remarked in a United Nations publication that "(T)he prostitute
17 ceases to be the major factor in the spread of venereal disease in 18 the United States today."<sup>99/</sup> This general conclusion has been 19 firmly ratified by knowledgeable physicians and investigators in 20 the field of public health. Because research has so consistently 21 negated the primacy of prostitution in the transmission of 22 venereal disease, and because the popular belief to the contrary
23 is nevertheless held with the tenacity usually invested in notions
24 born of dogma rather than of science, let us pause to consider the 25 evidence.

26 Following her comprehensive study of prostitution in Seattle,
27 Professor Jennifer James of the University of Washington School of 28 Medicine observed that:

1           Public Health advisors believe that prostitutes are
2 well-educated about venereal disease problems and are
3 watchful for them. They are aware of preventive
4 techniques which include using prophylactics, checking
5 customers, and seeking medical care, because a
6 reputation as one who is infected would cut down the 7 relatively large volume of repeat business which most 8 prostitutes depend on.<sup>100/</sup>

9           Dr. James further remarks, in a conclusion shared by many of 10 her colleagues, that "Public Health advisors believe that the 11 increase in venereal disease is related more to a general change
12 in sexual values unaccompanied by health education. . . ." <sup>101/</sup>
13 Dr. William M. Edwards, Jr., Chief of the Bureau of Preventive
14 Medicine, Nevada State Health Division, recently concurred in this 15 view, saying:

16           The problem isn't in the house of prostitution;
17 it's out in the general population. . . . Prostitutes
18 are much more alert to the possibilities of infection
19 and get examined very frequently.<sup>102/</sup>

20           Dr. Edwards further indicated that the venereal disease rate
21 among prostitutes is less than five percent (5%), while among high
22 school students age 15-19, the rate is twenty-five percent (25%).
23 Dr. R. Palmer Beasley of the University of Washington School of 24 Public Health and Community Medicine similarly averred that 25 "(m)ost venereal disease spread is not between prostitutes and 26 their customers. Probably ninety percent (90%) of venereal
27 disease is unrelated to prostitution." Dr. Charles Winick of 28 C.C.N.Y. and the American Social Health Association, co-author of

1 The Lively Commerce (New York, 1972), was even more conservative
2 in his estimate:

3           We know from many different studies that the amount
4 of venereal disease attributable to prostitution is
5 remaining fairly constant at a little under five percent
6 (5%), which is a negligible proportion compared to the 7 amount of venereal disease that we have.<sup>103/</sup>

8           Statistics promulgated by the Public Health Service of the 9 United States Department of Health, Education and Welfare further 10 document the minor role of prostitution in spreading venereal
11 disease:

12           In the United States during the 12-month period
13 ending June 30, 1971, less than three percent (3%) of 14 more than 13,600 females diagnosed with infectious
15 syphilis were prostitutes.<sup>104/</sup>

16           In Seattle during the three-year period preceding 1971,
17 during which time all women arrested as prostitutes were medically 18 examined, no more than one or two out of hundreds were found to 19 have infectious syphilis and fewer than six percent (6%) were 20 infected with gonorrhea.<sup>105/</sup> Meanwhile, the gonorrhea rate
21 increased fivefold among residents of Prince George's County,
22 Maryland, in the last decade; and quadrupled in Arlington,
23 Virginia, between 1969-1970 alone.<sup>106/</sup>

24           The viewpoint of the experts may easily be corroborated
25 inferentially; for while the highest rate of venereal disease
26 exists in the age group 15-30 (comprising eighty-four percent 27 (84%) of all reported venereal disease cases), the age group which 28 most frequents prostitutes is 30-60 (seventy percent (70%) of

1 "johns" in Seattle).<sup>107/</sup> Nor is this age pattern for prostitutes'
2 clientele by any means peculiar to Seattle, as other portraits of 3 typical patrons will readily attest.<sup>108/</sup> As Robert M. Nellis of 4 the San Francisco City Clinic succinctly put it: "Prostitution is 5 not where it's at with V.D. today; it's Johnny next door and Susie
6 up the street."<sup>109,110/</sup>

7 Even were this Court persuaded that prostitution is a major
8 source of the proliferation of venereal disease, it is patently
9 clear that this harm could be controlled by a more narrowly drawn 10 statute, one not abridging privacy and personal liberties as does 11 a total prohibition. . . . Other nations have long had schemes
12 requiring prostitutes to register with health authorities, to have 13 regular medical examinations, or to comply with other health
14 regulations. In most of the counties of Nevada prostitution is 15 legal in state-licensed houses with provision for medical 16 maintenance. It is not this Court's purpose to encourage 17 prostitution nor to advocate any such scheme of regulation; it is 18 sufficient to note that whatever state interest is entailed here
19 can adequately be protected by means short of prohibition of 20 soliciting and the attendant deprivation of constitutional
21 rights.<sup>111/</sup> In light of the foregoing, the hypothetical public 22 health rationale must fail.

23 ORGANIZED CRIME:

24 It is important to consider another potential government
25 allegation, not here made but frequently advanced, and also wholly 26 unsupported by any evidence in these cases, that banning 27 solicitation can be constitutionally justified because 28 prostitution is often linked with organized crime. Again we

1 confront a proposition whose popular acceptance has survived long
2 after the actual conditions which it may once have described. The 3 Presidential Task Force Report on Organized Crime addresses itself
4 directly to this question:

5           Prostitution . . . plays a small and declining role
6           in organized crime's operations . . . Prostitution is 7           difficult to organize, and discipline is hard to 8           maintain. Several important convictions or organized 9           crime figures in prostitution cases in the 1930's and 10          1940's made the criminal executives wary of further
11          partitipation.<sup>112/</sup>

12          Other writers in the field accord with this view. Dr.
13 Charles Winick observes that ". . . nowadays prostitution . . . is 14 too visible an activity for organized crime -- it's too dangerous.
15 Therefore, organized crime has pretty much gotten out of the 16 prostitution business."<sup>113/</sup> As another scholar added, ". . .
17 organized crime has more lucrative and less perilous enterprises
18 available to it."<sup>114/</sup> These views were reiterated within the 19 particular context of the District of Columbia by Lieutenant
20 Charles Rinaldi in an interview conducted while he was chief of 21 the Morals Division of the District of Columbia Metropolitan 22 Police:

23           There is no real organization of call girls here in 24           Washington. Maybe there's a loose network, but only
25           infrequently do you find one pimp with a couple of girls
26           working for him. The Mafia isn't around here. . . .
27           Anyway, prostitution just isn't profitable enough in 28           Washington to keep any organization interested.<sup>115/</sup>

1           The San Francisco Committee on Crime injects another
2 dimension to the analysis:

3           It is also probable that if prostitution were not a
4 crime, it would not be organized. In any event, a law
5 enforcement policy of sweeping prostitutes off the 6 streets and into our courts is no way to keep organized 7 crime out of prostitution.<sup>116/</sup>

8           The Committee is presumably alluding to the need for 9 structure and organization generated by the efforts necessary to 10 elude detection and combat legal prosecution. In such a 11 situation, otherwise private entrepreneurs are forced toward 12 alliances with underworld syndicates for "protection," while the 13 attendant occasion for police corruption grows in ominous
14 proportion.

15           Another important perspective on the problem is suggested by 16 Professor Kingsley Davis:

17           Prostitution has probably declined as underworld
18 business in America; not only have demand and supply
19 slackened, but other activities, such as labor-union
20 control, have proved immensely profitable and easier to 21 organize.<sup>117/</sup>

22           While this Court naturally expresses no view on the 23 relationship of organized crime with organized labor, it is a 24 conceivable affiliation no less logically plausible than that of 25 organized crime and prostitution. However, one would expect to 26 find few serious proponents of the abolition of labor unions in 27 order to prevent their potential domination by criminal 28 syndicates. Courts have, in fact, long held that society should

1 regulate illegal conduct directly, rather than prohibit other
2 activities on the ground that those activities are somehow, in 3 some cases, connected with illegality. Papachristou v. City of 4 Jacksonville, 405 U.S. 156 (1972); Stanley v. Georgia, 394 U.S.
5 557 (1969).

6 Accordingly, even if prostitution were closely connected to 7 organized crime, which a careful investigation demonstrates is not
8 the case in this jurisdiction, this Court could not properly
9 support an absolute prohibition of constitutionally protected
10 conduct in order indirectly to suppress proscribed activity. This 11 rationale too must fail.

12 ANCILLIARY CRIMES:

13 Closely allied with the foregoing alleged state interest in 14 prohibiting solicitation of prostitution is the endeavor to 15 inhibit crimes which may somehow be ancillary to prostitution. By 16 restricting prostitution, so the teory goes, one may also minimize 17 the occurrence of related crimes against the person or property of 18 either consenting party. While the logic of this analysis seems 19 sound, the evidence is less than conclusive.

20 The Seattle study remarks bluntly that:

21 . . . prohibition of prostitution itself causes
22 crime. . . . The prohibition . . . has a double impact.
23 To the extent that prostitutes believe their victims
24 will not report a robbery or theft they will be 25 encouraged to commit it. Further, prostitutes, more
26 than occasional victims of assaults by customers,<sup>118/</sup> are 27 also discouraged from involving the law.<sup>119/</sup> (Footnote 28 supplied.)

1           Thus attachment of the stigma and penalties of the criminal
2 law to basically innocuous sensual conduct may actually deter
3 application of such sanctions to genuinely harmful behavior.

4           Nor is the alternative simply resignation to the criminal
5 activity which may arise in conjunction with prostitution any more
6 than to the crime which may be ancillary to the vending of goods
7 or the practice of law. The San Francisco Committee on Crime was 8 admirably direct in meeting this issue:

9           Bearing in mind the financial limits on public
10 resources available to combat crime, this is a poor area
11 to apply "consumer protection" against the consumer's
12 own gullibility. The answer to prostitution-connected 13 force, violence, or theft is that it is chargeable and 14 punishable as a separate crime, independent of any act
15 or solicitation of prostitution.<sup>120/</sup>

16           Stated most baldly, "(I)f prostitutes or pimps rob or beat 17 patrons, the victims should charge robbery or bodily harm, not 18 prostitution."<sup>121/</sup> It goes without saying that the prostitutes 19 should also be free to charge robbery or bodily harm against 20 patrons; they ought not to be deprived of protection of life and 21 property simply because of their chosen "profession."

22           Furthermore, it is not clear that crimes commonly associated 23 with prostitution are primarily attributable to the prostitutes
24 themselves. The San Francisco Committee on Crime rejects such a
25 notion, saying:

26           (I)n short, society's effort to prevent crimes of 27 violence associated with prostitution would be more
28 effective by concentrating law enforcement efforts on

1 the pimps rather than on the girls, on the "associated
2 crimes" rather than prostitution.<sup>122/</sup>

3 Nor does a proscription of soliciting indirectly accomplish
4 control of the pimps; on the contrary, the intrusion of the 5 criminal law greatly augments the typical prostitute's need for a
6 pimp and his corresponding power to author wrongdoing.

7 If the evidence in this area of inquiry is less than 8 conclusive, the law is not. To arrest and criminally prosecute a
9 prostitute because of a possibility that crime-related activity
10 might be involved directly or indirectly is massively antithetical
11 to traditional concepts of due process, equal protection, and 12 individual liberty. The Supreme Court recently voided a Florida
13 vagrancy statute which made similar assumptions about the criminal 14 propensities of certain classes of people. In Papachristou v.
15 City of Jacksonville, supra, Justice Douglas wrote for a unanimous
16 Court:

17 A presumption that people who might walk or loaf or 18 loiter or stroll or frequent houses where liquor is 19 sold, or who are supported by their wives or who look
20 suspicious to the police are to become future criminals
21 is too precarious for a rule of law. The implicit
22 presumption in these generalized vagrancy standards --
23 that crime is being nipped in the bud -- is too
24 extravagant to deserve extended treatment. Of course,
25 they are nets making easy the round-up of so-called 26 undesirables. But the rule of law implies equality and 27 justice in its application. Vagrancy laws of the 28 Jacksonville type teach that the scales of justice are

1 so tipped that even-handed administration of the law is
2 not possible. The rule of law, evenly applied to 3 minorities as well as majorities, to the poor as well as
4 to the rich, is the great mucilage that holds society
5 together. 405 U.S. at 171.

6 Within a context of the right to privacy and First Amendment
7 freedoms, the Court in Stanley v. Georgia, supra, reached an 8 analogous conclusion concerning prohibition of protected behavior
9 to prevent possible related harms. A state:

10 . . . may no more prohibit mere possession of 11 obscenity on the ground that it may lead to anti-social 12 conduct than it may prohibit the possession of chemistry
13 books on the ground that they may lead to the 14 manufacture of homemade spirits. 394 U.S. at 565.

15 If indeed there is evidence that prostitution is sometimes 16 coincident with certain crimes, there is also ample indication
17 that the extension of the criminal law to soliciting significantly 18 hinders application of legal sanctions to those very crimes. By 19 the most fundamental precepts of our law, it is to those violent
20 acts that such sanctions must directly be addressed. Endorsement
21 of an alleged state interest which precisely inverts this 22 proscriptive emphasis would be a perversion of justice in which 23 this Court will not acquiesce. The rationale fails with its 24 predecessors. . . .

25 PUBLIC MORALITY:

26 The inordinate overextension of this statute, so
27 disproportional with any of the potential evils occasioned by 28 solicitation for prostitution, contributes to the inevitable

1 deduction that the government's primary concern here is to
2 suppress prostitution because it is "immoral." Having reached
3 what this Court believes to be the central, if tacit, state
4 interest in these cases, it must now consider the broad question
5 of the right of secular government to regulate public morality.

6 The government contends that the state has the obligation and 7 right to encourage upright and moral behavior on the part of its 8 citizens. Prescinding from the obvious dilemma of choosing which 9 of a host of conflicting ethical theories to promulgate (and who 10 is to make the choice), affirmation of governmental power to 11 legislate morals is fraught with hazards. Upon the acceptance of 12 such a view, the state may ultimately be given the right to 13 regulate everything. Indeed, there is little human conduct that 14 could not be invested with moral implications; thus the sphere of 15 permissible state regulation could soon devour all personal 16 liberties in the name of community morality. But who shall be the 17 final arbiter -- Billy Graham or Billy Sunday, Carl McIntyre or 18 Karl Marx? This Court is convinced that the proper perspective on 19 regulation of public morals was enunciated by the well-known
20 Wolfenden Report:

21 Unless a deliberate attempt is to be made by 22 society, acting through the agency of the law, to equate
23 the sphere of crime with that of sin, there must remain
24 a realm of private morality and immorality which is, in 25 brief and cruder terms, not the law's business.<sup>123/</sup>

26 The equivalence of crime with sin is surely not tenable in 27 light of the privacy doctrine which we have been discussing. If 28 the right to privacy has any viable meaning, it cannot be defeated

1 by a mere assertion that the state has the right to regulate
2 "immoral" conduct even though that conduct is not shown to hurt
3 anyone. The advocacy of ethical theories is not synonymous with 4 the demonstration of concrete societal harms. This Court concurs
5 with Mill and Hart in insisting that it is only the latter which 6 would justify a court's finding of an evil sufficient to warrant
7 dilution of liberties. "So long as others are not harmed, we 8 . . . justly deserve freedom, even the freedom to be immoral."<sup>124/</sup>
9 Upon thorough examination of the evidence pertinent to state
10 claims (both stated and implied) of the harms caused by 11 prostitution, the Court is satisfied that they are spurious. The 12 only injury which actually is traceable to consensual acts of 13 prostitution between adults is the sense of indignation spawned in 14 certain other persons. This so-called harm is not of an order
15 cognizable by the law. Absent showing of a concrete evil that 16 government has a right to prevent, prostitution, like other
17 consensual sexual activity, is not a fit matter for proscriptive
18 legislation. The Court agrees that "sexual acts or activities
19 accomplished without violence, constraint, or fraud, should find 20 no place in our penal codes."<sup>125/</sup> Soliciting for prostitution in 21 the District of Columbia is such an uninjurious activity; this 22 perception, coupled with the constitutional rights here at stake,
23 precludes the criminalization of this verbal behavior demanded by 24 Section 2701.

25 It must also be observed that criminalization of "immoral"
26 behavior collides with other difficulties in its drive to 27 eradicate the universe of undesirable conduct:

28 The criminal code of any jurisdiction tends to make

1 a crime of everything that people are against, without
2 regard to enforceability, changing social concepts,
3 etc. . . . The result is that the criminal code becomes
4 society's trash bin. The police have to rummage around
5 in this material and are expected to prevent everything
6 that is unlawful. They cannot do so because many of the 7 things prohibited are simply beyond
8 enforcement. . . .<sup>126/</sup>

9 This Court is reminded of the estimate by Kinsey and his 10 associates that were all laws concerning sex crimes rigidly
11 enforced, ninety-five percent (95%) of the male population would 12 at one time or another be in a penal institution.<sup>127/</sup> To attempt 13 thoroughgoing enforcement of the ban on soliciting prostitution in 14 the District of Columbia would be an enterprise almost equally
15 ambitious, costly, and impracticable. The Court is further
16 convinced that evidence cannot be adduced to show that enforcement 17 efforts under Section 2701 make any significant progress toward 18 the elimination of solicitation for prostitution in this city.
19 Naturally, it transcends the Court's province to make legislative 20 determinations. The Court ventures these explorations simply to 21 suggest the great morass of problems which one encounters in the 22 attempt to regulate an area so broad and nebulous as public
23 morals. For present purposes it suffices to examine the impact of 24 such regulatory efforts upon the exercise of constitutional
25 rights.

26 This Court finds that a generalized belief that certain 27 conduct is immoral is no substitute for a showing of 28 governmentally cognizable harms caused by that conduct.

1 Solicitation for prostitution may be activity that some, even
2 many, in this community find morally reprehensible. Nonetheless,
3 absent any demonstrated tangible harms emanating from this 4 activity, particularly none sufficiently compelling to justify an
5 abridgement of the fundamental rights involved here, the Court
6 concludes that Section 22-2701 is invalid as an unconstitutional
7 invasion of defendants' rights of privacy and free speech. From 8 U.S. v. Moses, supra.

9	////	///
10	////	///
11	////	///
12	////	///
13	////	///
14	////	///
15	////	///
16	////	///
17	////	///
18	////	///
19	////	///
20	////	///
21	////	///
22	////	///
23	////	///
24	////	///
25	////	///
26	////	///
27	////	///
28	////	///

SECTION 647(b) IS UNCONSTITUTIONALLY VAGUE
BECAUSE THE DEFINITION OF THE CRIME
RESTS ON THE MEANING OF SUCH TERMS
AS "ANY LEWD ACT" AND
"OR OTHER CONSIDERATION"

With reference to subdivision (a) of section 647, the words "lewd or dissolute conduct" were declared unconstitutional by the California Supreme Court. Pryor v. Municipal Court (1979) 25 Cal.3d 238.

The definition of prostitution contained in section 647(b) partially rests upon the meaning of the phrase "any lewd act for money or other consideration." The Legislature has not defined that phrase in the statute. Thus, on its face, the use of that phrase renders the statute unconstitutional.

There is only one appellate case which appears to define "any lewd act" as used in this subdivision. In the case of People v. Norris, supra, the Appellate Department of the Los Angeles Superior Court held that it was permissible to instruct a jury that "any lewd act" meant an act which is "lustful, lascivious, unchaste, wanton, or loose in morals and conduct." Norris, Supra, at 139.

That definition of "lewd" has been disapproved by the Supreme Court in Pryor as unconstitutionally vague. Pryor, supra, at 249-251. There are no other appellate cases which presently define that phrase as used in the prostitution statute.

There is, however, a case presently pending in the Court of

1 Appeal, which would attempt to answer this problem and resolve how
2 "lewd" should be defined in the prostitution statute so that it
3 conforms to the guidelines of Pryor with respect to vagueness.
4 People v. Hill, 2 Crim. No. 34488, under submission to Division
5 Four of the Second Appellate District.

6 Rather than engage in a lengthy discourse on this subject
7 now, defendants will submit a supplemental brief to this Court
8 after the Hill case is decided. Likewise, the other vagueness
9 issues will be included in the supplemental brief.

10	////	///
11	////	///
12	////	///
13	////	///
14	////	///
15	////	///
16	////	///
17	////	///
18	////	///
19	////	///
20	////	///
21	////	///
22	////	///
23	////	///
24	////	///
25	////	///
26	////	///
27	////	///
28	////	///

1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19
20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28

XII
ISSUE 7
THE SOLICITATION PORTION OF SECTION 647(b)
VIOLATES THE FREE SPEECH PROTECTIONS
OF THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE
FEDERAL CONSTITUTION AND ARTICLE I, SECTION 2
OF THE CALIFORNIA CONSTITUTION

As articulated in the foregoing sections of this brief, private sexual conduct between consenting adults is constitutionally protected. This is true, even though money or other consideration may be offered or exchanged between the parties to the sex act.

Also previously discussed is the fact that the engaging portion of this statute is unconstitutional on its face because it violates the right to privacy and the right to due process of law as guaranteed by both the State and Federal Constitutions.

We need not, therefore, be concerned here with the longstanding rule that the state may prohibit "solicitation to commit a crime." This is so because the engaging portion of the statute is unconstitutional. The solicitation, portion, therefore, prohibits requests to commit many forms of lawful sexual conduct.

Before delving into specific defects in the solicitation portion of this statute, a review of basic constitutional principles of free speech is in order.

"The constitutional guarantees of freedom of speech forbid the States to punish the use of words or language not within 'narrowly limited classes of speech.' Chaplinsky v. New

1 Hampshire, 315 U.S. 568, 571, 62 S.Ct. 766, 760, 86 L.Ed. 1031
2 (1942). Even as to such a class, however, because 'the line
3 between speech unconditionally guaranteed and speech which may be 4 legitimately regulated, suppressed, or punished is finely drawn,'
5 (citation omitted) "[i]n every case the power to regulate must be 6 so exercised as not, in attaining a permissible end, unduly to 7 infringe the protected freedom.' (Citation omitted.) In other
8 words, the statute must be carefully drawn or be authoritatively
9 construed to punish only unprotected speech and not be susceptible
10 of application to protected expression. 'Because First Amendment
11 freedoms need breathing space to survive, government may regulate 12 in the area only with narrow specificity.'" Gooding v. Wilson
13 (1972) 92 S.Ct. 1103, 1106.

14       What are those "narrowly limited classes of speech" which the 15 state has the right to suppress? They include "the lewd and 16 obscene, the profane, the libelous, and the insulting or 17 'fighting' words -- those which by their very utterance inflict
18 injury or tend to incite an immediate breach of the peace."
19 Chaplinsky, supra, at p. 572. These are the limited classes of 20 speech which the state has the right to punish because of their 21 content.

22       With respect to prohibiting the content of certain classes of 23 speech:

24               The question in every case is whether the words are 25 used in such circumstances and are of such a nature as 26 to create a clear and present danger that they will 27 bring about the substantive evils that Congress has a 28 right to prevent. Brandenburg v. Ohio (1969) 395 U.S.

1 415, 429.

2 The argument that speech is stripped of its First Amendment
3 protection because it is "commercial" was answered a few years ago
4 by the United States Supreme Court:

5 The State was not free of constitutional restraint
6 merely because the advertisement involves sales or 7 "solicitations," (citations omitted) or because
8 appellant was paid for printing it, (citations omitted)
9 or because appellant's motive or the motive of the 10 advertiser may have involved financial gain (citations 11 omitted). The existence of "commercial activity, in 12 itself, is no justification for narrowing the protection
13 of expression secured by the First Amendment." Bigelow
14 v. Virginia (1975) 95 S.Ct. 2222, 2231.

15 In the Bigelow case the Court noted that it had, in an 16 earlier case, made a holding which appeared to strip commercial
17 speech of all constitutional protections and thus this doctrine
18 crept into constitutional law. In the case of Valentine v.
19 Crestensen (1942) 62 S.Ct. 920, 921, it has said, "We are equally 20 clear that the Constitution imposes no such restraint on 21 government as respects purely commercial advertising." In Bigelow
22 the Court explained that holding:

23 But the holding is a distinctly limited one: the 24 ordinance was upheld as a reasonable regulation of the 25 manner in which commercial advertising could be 26 distributed . . . . The case obviously does not support
27 any sweeping proposition that advertising is unprotected
28 per se. Bigelow, at p. 2231.

1           Before surveying cases involving the free speech clause of 2 the California Constitution, caution should be taken that:

3           Regardless of the particular label asserted by the 4 State -- whether it calls the speech "commercial" or 5 "solicitation" -- a court may not escape the task of 6 assessing the First Amendment interest at stake and 7 weigh it against the public interest allegedly served by 8 the regulation. Bigelow, at 2235.

9           Article I, Section 2 of the California Constitution reads:
10 "Every person may freely speak, write and publish his or her 11 sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of 12 this right. A law may not restrain or abridge liberty of speech
13 or press." The California Supreme Court recognized in Robins v.
14 Pruneyard Shopping Center (1979) 23 Cal.3d 899, 909, that the free
15 speech clause of the California Constitution provides more
16 protection against the regulation of speech than does the First
17 Amendment:

18           Though the Framers could have adopted the words of 19 the Federal Bill of Rights, they chose not to do 20 so. . . . "[a] protective provision more definitive and 21 inclusive than the First Amendment is contained in our 22 state constitutional guarantee of the right of free
23 speech and press."

24           The California Supreme Court, in People v. Fogelson (1978) 21
25 Cal.3d 158, 165, held that "distinctly commercial forms of 26 solicitation" are entitled to constitutional protection. The 27 Court has often made distinctions between prohibition of speech
28 because of its content and reasonable regulations of time, place,

1 and manner.

2 The fact that speech involves motivations of "profit" does
3 not dilute protections against regulation of content. Burton v.
4 Municipal Court (1968) 68 Cal.Rptr. 721, 724. However, this basic 5 principle does not bestow upon one engaged in a commercial
6 activity "gratituous immunity from all restraint in the pursuit of 7 his occupation. A municipality may impose reasonable regulations
8 upon the conduct of a business enterprise." Burton, supra, at 9 724.

10 If a California appellate court could construe the 11 solicitation portion of section 647(b) in a way that would 12 transform it from an unconstitutional restraint on the content of 13 speech and into a reasonable regulation of time, place, and manner
14 of solicitation, the free speech problems could be cured.

15 The state may, for example, reasonably regulate 16 time, place, and manner of engaging in solicitation in 17 public places. (Citation omitted.) The state may also 18 reasonably and narrowly regulate solicitations in order
19 to prevent fraud, (citation omitted) or to prevent undue 20 harassment of passersby or interference with the 21 business operations being conducted on the property.

22 Fogelson, supra, at 165.

23 On its, face, the solicitation portion of Section 647(b) is 24 not a "reasonable regulation" of time, place, and manner. It
25 forbids all solicitations calculated to obtain consent to engage 26 in private sexual relations with other adults for a consideration.
27 Therefore, until authoritatively construed by an appellate court
28 with power to create statewide precedent, the solicitation portion

1 of the statute is unconstitutionally overbroad. Private and
2 discrete solicitations appear to be prohibited as well as public
3 and offensive solicitations.

4 Since private sexual conduct between consenting adults is
5 statutorily recognized and is constitutionally protected, a person
6 must have the right to solicit for that consent. For many 7 persons, such consent will not be forthcoming from the partner of 8 their choosing, unless they offer some form of consideration. A
9 total prohibition of such an attempt to privately and 10 nonoffensively solicit such consent from a willing listener
11 violates the free speech clauses of the State and Federal 12 Constitutions.

13 In the case of Di Lorenzo v. City of Pacific Grove (1968) 67
14 Cal.Rptr. 3, 5, the Court noted that although the government may 15 issue reasonable regulations as to such matters:

16 [T]he right to regulate does not necessarily 17 sanction the outright prohibition.

18 The Di Lorenzo court made several other pertinent 19 observations about legal distinctions which are involved in the 20 instant case:

21 In determining First Amendment rights a distinction
22 is to be made between communications transmitted to 23 willing recipients and messages forced upon those who do
24 not wish to receive them. . .

25 "The right of free speech is guaranteed every 26 citizen that he may reach the minds of willing listeners
27 and to do so there must be opportunity to win their 28 attention" . . .

1 Plaintiff is permitted to hand her newspaper to any
2 Pacific Grove householder who will accept it, and to 3 solicit consent to thereafter throw the paper onto the 4 premises. (Emphasis added) Di Lorenzo, at 7.

5 The Court recognized that the requirement of the ordinance
6 compelling consent from the homeowner before throwing newspapers
7 on his premises was reasonable. The ordinance in question did not
8 suffer constitutional infirmity because it allowed the publisher
9 to seek that necessary consent.

10 In the instant case, the statute appears to prevent one from 11 seeking consent from a potentially willing adult by means of any 12 solicitation which involves the offering of any consideration.
13 This is wherein the defect lies with the solicitation portion of 14 the statute.

15 If it is possible to do so, an appellate court must attempt 16 to constitutionally interpret a statute which appears to be 17 constitutionally defective. Pryor v. Municipal Court, supra, at 18 253. However, until so authoritatively construed, the statute is 19 unconstitutional on its face.

20 The solicitation portion of section 647(b) may be capable of 21 a constitutional construction. Commercial speech is subject to 22 reasonable regulation by the state. Constitutional infirmities
23 with the solicitation portion may disappear if it is limited to 24 the prohibition of public solicitations for commercial sexual 25 conduct which the speaker knows or should know is directed to a
26 person who may be offended by the solicitation. Thus the 27 prohibition would be limited to commercially oriented speech which 28 is thrust on listeners who may be offended. There is sufficient

1 state interest to prohibit such commercial speech. The state has 2 a right to enact reasonable regulations to protect the privacy of 3 other citizens and to prevent the advertisers' message from being 4 thrust upon a captive audience.

5 In the area of noncommercial speech the fact that the speech
6 is or may be offensive is no reason for prohibiting that speech.
7 Cohen v. California (1971) 91 S.Ct. 1780. However, commercial
8 speech is subject to reasonable regulation and such a regulation
9 as defined in the previous paragraph would appear to be 10 reasonable.

11 Such a regulation would be analagous to the regulation of 12 public sexual conduct in California under Section 647(a) of the 13 Penal Code. The Supreme Court held that even though sexual 14 conduct occurs in a place that is technically public, there is 15 little state interest in prohibiting such conduct absent a showing 16 that a person is present who may be offended. Pryor, supra, at 17 256. Thus, in order to convict a person for engaging in lewd
18 conduct in public, the prosecution must prove that the defendant
19 knew or should have known that the observer was a person who may 20 be offended.

21 If construed as previously defined, the solicitation portion 22 of section 647(b) would appear to be a rational balancing of the 23 constitutional rights of those who wish to secure consent for a
24 sexual act to be performed in a private place, on the one hand,
25 and the rights of pedestrians and others to be free from unwanted 26 and sometimes harassing commercial sexual solicitations in public 27 places, on the other hand.

28 ////

///

XIII

CONCLUSION

1
2
3 Private sexual relations between consenting adults is
4 constitutionally protected behavior and such status is not lost
5 merely because some form of consideration passes between the 6 participants. The state should remain out of the business of 7 regulating the private sexual lives of its citizens. There is no
8 rational basis, much less a compelling state interest for 9 regulating private morality.

10 The engaging portion of section 647(b) is in conflict with 11 the constitutional rights of sexual privacy and due process and 12 is, therefore, unconstitutional on its face. Although a court
13 should interpret a statute whenever possible to give it a
14 constitutional construction, no such construction is readily
15 available to cure the defects of the engaging portion of this 16 statute.

17 The engaging portion is easily severable from the soliciting
18 portion of the statute. Thus, in order to avoid defeating the 19 obvious intent of the Legislature to regulate the public aspects 20 of prostitution, it will not be necessary to void the entire 21 subdivision if there is a constitutional construction which may be 22 given to the soliciting portion of the statute. Such an 23 interpretation is possible.

24 The soliciting portion of the statute can be saved if 25 interpreted as a reasonable regulation of commercial speech rather 26 than a total prohibition of the content of expression. After 27 balancing the interests of the state to prohibit the thrusting of 28 offensive speech on unwilling listeners against the constitutional

1 rights of the individual to solicit consent to engage in private
2 sexual relations with a potential partner, such a construction
3 becomes apparent. The solicitation portion of the statute must be
4 limited to the prohibition of public solicitations of commercial
5 sexual conduct under circumstances where the solicitor knows or
6 should know that the listener may be offended by the solicitation.
7 As so construed the solicitation portion of the statute does not
8 offend the First Amendment protections of free speech or Article
9 I, Section 2 of the California Constitution. Such a construction
10 allows persons to speak freely, but also makes them responsible 11 for the abuse of this right. Although offensiveness is not, per 12 se, a reason for prohibiting speech because of its content, as so 13 construed, Section 647(b) is not a prohibition of the content of 14 speech. It is a reasonable prohibition of certain content, namely, 15 commercial sexual solicitation, in a limited location, namely, in 16 public places or places open to the public, and in a limited
17 manner, namely, in a manner which the defendant knows or should 18 know may offend the listener. As such, it is not an 19 unconstitutional restraint.

20 Such a construction of Section 647(b) comports with the 21 apparent legislative intent underlying Section 647 of the Penal 22 Code. Subdivision (a) of that Section regulates public sexual 23 conduct; subdivision (c) prohibits public accosting and begging
24 for alms; subdivision (d) regulates loitering in public restrooms;
25 subdivision (e) limits wandering and roaming the public streets
26 under criminally suspicious circumstances; subdivision (f)
27 attempts to deal with the public inebriate. As it must be 28 constitutionally interpreted, subdivision (b) prohibits public and

1 offensive commercial sexual solicitations.

2 Furthermore, all of the public aspects of prostitution which
3 the state has a legitimate interest to regulate or prohibit will 4 be covered by this and other statutes. Pimping and pandering are 5 prohibited by sections 266h and 266i of the Penal Code.

6 Notwithstanding the decriminalization of private sex for a
7 consideration because of the lack of state interest in such a
8 prohibition, statutes prohibiting pimping and pandering may serve
9 legitimate and possibly compelling state interests, i.e., prevention 10 of corruption and greed in financial transactions involving 11 intimate and personal relations of others. Keeping a disorderly
12 house which disturbs the neighborhood is prohibited by section 316
13 P.C. Using minors for purposes of prostitution is prohibited by 14 several statutes, e.g., 267 P.C., 309 P.C., 266 P.C. Soliciting
15 or engaging in sex with a minor is prohibited whether or not money
16 is involved under section 647a P.C. (annoying or molesting a 17 minor). Offensive touchings are prohibited under section 242 P.C.
18 (battery).

19 Engaging in public sexual conduct or soliciting for such 20 conduct is prohibited -- whether consideration is involved or 21 not -- under section 647(a) P.C.

22 Finally, subdivision (b) of section 647 will serve the 23 function of prohibiting public solicitations to commit commercial
24 sexual conduct under circumstances where the solicitor knows or
25 should know that the listener may be offended by the solicitation.

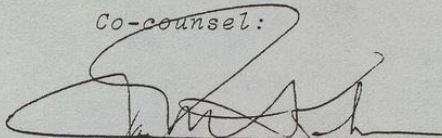

26 Thus, all of the public aspects of prostitution are 27 effectively regulated or prohibited, while private morality is 28 not.

1           On its face, subdivision (b) of section 647 fails to take
2 into account the foregoing constitutional principles and therefore 3 violates the right to privacy, due process, and freedom of speech.
4 Since the statute is unconstitutional on its face, the Demurrer
5 should be sustained. On appeal, however, it will be possible for 6 an appropriate appellate court of statewide jurisdiction to 7 salvage the statute by voiding the engaging portion, severing it
8 from the remainder of the statute, and interpreting the 9 solicitation portion in the manner described above.

10           For the foregoing reasons, this Court is respectfully
11 requested to sustain the Demurrer to the Complaint.

12
13 DATED: 2-18-80

Respectfully submitted:
Counsel:

_____
THOMAS F. COLEMAN

Co-counsel:

_____
JAY M. KOHORN

Associated Counsel:
ARTHUR C. WARNER
DEBORAH FRANK
PETER A. ROSS
ARNOLD JOHNSON

24
25
26
27
28

NOTES

1/ Committee on Homosexual Offences and Prostitution,
Report, command paper 247 (Home Office, London, 1957), pp. 9-10,
Hereafter cited as Wolfenden Report.

2/ Referring to prostitutes, St. Augustin wrote: What can be . . . more sordid, more bereft of decency or more full of turpitude than prostitutes, procurers, and the other pests of that sort? [Yet] remove prostitutes from human affairs, and you will unsettle everything on account of lusts"; that is, you will defile everything with lust. (St. Augustine, De Ordine, translated by Robert F. Russell (New York, N.Y., Cosmopolitan Science & Arts
Service Co., 1942), Book II, chap. IV, sec. 12, p. 95.)

It must be remembered that, in the eyes of the Church,
there was little if any difference between prostitution, fornication, and adultery. All stood equally condemned because they involved extra-marital sex and were likely to involve non-procreative sexual relations as well. As Aquinas stated,
"matrimony is natural for men, and promiscuous performance of the sexual act, outside matrimony, is contrary to man's good. For this reason, it must be a sin." Aquinas then points out that it cannot "be deemed a slight sin for a man to arrange for the emission of semen apart from the proper purpose of generating
. . . children" because "the inordinate emission of semen is incompatible with the natural good; namely, the preservation of the species." He concludes, therefore, that "after the sin of homicide . . ., this type of sin appears to take next place."
Thus fornication and, by extension, prostitution, are second only

1 only to murder in their sinfulness. (Thomas Aquinas, On the Truth
2 of the Catholic Faith: Summa contra Gentiles, translated by
3 Vernon J. Bourke (Garden City, New York, 1956), Book III, Part 2,
4 chap. 122(8),(9)&(11), p. 146.)

5 3/ Luther actually wrote little about prostitution as 6 distinct from fornication and other forms of extra-marital sexual 7 relations, against which he inveighed in the strongest terms.
8 Like the medieval Church before him, he held that the gravamen of 9 the offence was that sexual relations took place outside of 10 marriage, not that they were paid for. One of his continuing 11 charges against the Roman Church was what he considered to be its 12 easy-going attitude toward extra-marital sexual relations. Thus,
13 for example, he stated that a man

14 may have had vile commerce with six hundred prostitutes
15 and seduced countless matrons and virgins, and kept many 16 mistresses, yet nothing of this would be an impediment,
17 and prevent his becoming a bishop, or a cardinal, or a 18 pope." (John Dillenberger, ed., Martin Luther:
19 Selections from his Writings (Garden City, New York, 20 1961), p. 347.)

21 4/ This did not mean, however, that there were no secular
22 efforts at prohibiting or controlling what amounted to 23 prostitution in England during medieval times. Maitland states
24 from information in the Pipe Rolls that "London citizens used to 25 arrest fornicating chaplains and put them in the Tun [presumably 26 a gaol] as night-walkers; in 1297 the bishop objected and the 27 practice was forbidden. At a later time severe by-laws were made
28 for the punishment of prostitutes, bawds, adulterers, and priests

1 found with women." (Sir Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland,
2 The History of English Law (Cambridge, England, 1928), Vol. II, p.
3 543, note 5, citing Munimenta Gildallae Rolls Series, containing 4 Liber Albus & Liber Custumarum), respectively Vol. II, p. 213 & 5 Vol. I, pp. 457-459.) These and other fleeting glimpses of 6 medieval social history would appear to indicate that the main
7 thrust was the suppression of sexual promiscuity in general rather 8 than prostitution in particular.

9 <sup>5/</sup> Wolfenden Report, op. cit., pp. 79-80. The absence of 10 any specific crime of prostitution at common law did not always 11 mean that conduct which amounted to prostitution was not penalized
12 under other statutes, such as those against vagrancy. For 13 example, on the very morrow of the Reformation, under Elizabeth,
14 we learn that "an armed company, headed by gentlemen, attacked
15 Bridewell [Prison]. Seeing that their object was the release of 16 certain unrepentant women whose profession concerned the gentlemen
17 only, it is probable that the whole of the rioters were 18 gentlemen." (Sir Walter Besant, London in the Time of the Tudors, 19 (London, 1904), p. 387.)

20 <sup>6/</sup> See Wolfenden Report, pp. 82-114 and notes, passim. One
21 of the reasons for the multiplicity of statutes is the English
22 practice of legislating separately for England, Wales, Scotland,
23 and Northern Ireland, as well as for particular cities. Thus some 24 of the laws on the subject apply only to England and Wales, others
25 to Scotland, some only to greater London, and others again only to 26 burgh police outside of greater London.

27 <sup>7/</sup> Wolfenden Report, p. 82 et seq.

28 <sup>8/</sup> Ibid., p. 98 et seq.

- 1           9/    Ibid., p. 109 et seq.
- 2           10/   Ibid., p. 101 et seq.
- 3           11/    The French Penal Code, translated by Jean F. Moreau &
4 Gerhard O. W. Mueller (Fred B. Rothman & Co., South Hackensack,
5 N.J., 1960), title II, chap. I, sec. IV, article 334(1)(2).
- 6           12/    Ibid., article eet.
- 7           13/    The German Draft Penal Code, translated by Neville Rose
8 (Fred B. Rothman & Co., south Hackensack, N.J., 1966), Special
9 Part, 2nd Division, title 3, sec. 224(1). This draft code, with 10 some changes that have no relevance here, was enacted into law by 11 the West German Bundestag in 1969, and now constitutes the present
12 West German Penal Code.
- 13           14/    Ibid., sec. 226(1)&(2).
- 14           15/    Ibid., sec. 230(1)&(2).
- 15           16/    The Austrian Penal Act, 1852 and 1945 as amended to 16 1965, translated by Norbert D. West & Samuel I. Shuman (Fred B.
17 Rothman & Co., South Hackensack, N.J., 1966), Part II, chap. 13, 18 sec. 512(a)(b)&(c).
- 19           17/    The Greek Penal Code, translated by Harald Schjoldager &
20 Finn Becker (Fred B. Rothman & Co., South Hackensack, N.J., 1973), 21 Book II, chap. 20, articles 349*3) & 350.
- 22           18/    The Norwegian Penal Code, translated by Harald
23 Schjoldager & Finn Becker (Fred B. Rothman & Co., South 24 Hackensack, N.J., 1961), Part II, chap. 19, sec. 202.
- 25           19/    Ibid., sec. 206.
- 26           20/    Ibid., sec. 203.
- 27           21/    A Preparatory Draft for the Revised Penal Code of Japan,
28 1961, B. J. George, Jr. ed., (Fred B. Rothman & Co., South

1 Hackensack, N.J., 1964), Part II, chap. XXII, article 263(1).
2 22/ See Korean Penal Code, translated by Paul K. Ryu, (Fred
3 B. Rothman & Co., South Hackensack, N.J., 1960), Part II, chap.
4 22, article 242.
5 23/ The Argentine Penal Code, translated by Emilio
6 Gonzalez-Lopez (Fred B. Rothman & Co., South Hackensack, N.J., 7 1963), Book II, title III, chap. 3, article 125(1)(2)&(3).
8 24/ The Turkish Penal Code, translated by Orhan Sepici &
9 Mustapa Ovacik (Fred B. Rothman & Co., South Hackensack, N.J., 10 1965), Book II, Part 8, chap. III, sec. 436.
11 25/ Ibid., sec. 435.
12 26/ Criminal Law, by Alan W. Mewett and Morris Manning,
13 1978, Butterworths, Toronto (textbook on substantive criminal 14 law).
15 27/ Martin's Criminal Code, 1978, Section 195.1.
16 28/ Hutt v. The Queen (1978), 38 C.C.C.(2d) 418, 82 D.L.R.
17 (3d) 95 (9:0) (S.C.C.)
18 29/ The New Jersey Code of Criminal Justice, sections
19 2C:34-1a(1)(2). (Emphasis added.)
20 30/ David A. J. Richards, "Commercial Sex and the Rights of 21 the Person: A Moral Argument for the Decriminalization of 22 Prostitution," University of Pennsylvania Law Review, CXXVII (No.
23 5, May, 1979), p. 1204. (Emphasis added.) Hereafter cited as 24 Commercial Sex and the Rights of the Person.
25 31/ American Law Institute, Model Penal Code (Philadelphia, 26 1959), Tentative Draft, No. 9, Sec. 207.12, p. 175, note 24.
27 32/ See infra., "California's Recognition of Sexual 28 Privacy."

1           33/ California Statutes, 1975, chapter 71, section 10 &
2 chapter 877, section 2.

3           34/ Pryor v. Municipal Court for the Los Angeles Judicial
4 District, 25 Cal.3d 238 (1979).

5           35/ See, for example, Penal Code Sections 286 (sodomy) and 6 288a (oral copulation) prior to their amendment by the Brown Act
7 in 1976.

8           36/ Commercial Sex and the Rights of the Person, op. cit.,
9 pp. 1205-1206.

10          37/ Ibid., p. 1206, note 45 with reference to G. B. Shaw,
11 "Mrs. Warren's Profession," in Plays Unpleasant (Penguin Books, 12 New York, N.Y., 1975), pp. 240-250.

13          38/ See California Penal Code Section 261 regulating
14 forcible rape and California Penal Code Section 261.5 regulating
15 statutory rape. The statutory rape section, enacted in 1970,
16 continues to incorporate the spousal exception.

17                 Several other states specifically incorporate a spousal
18 exception into their laws prohibiting sexual relations for money, 19 thus demonstrating that the allegation of the overbreadth of 20 Section 647(b) for its failure to create such an exception is not 21 so far fetched. See, for example, Chapter 38, Section 11-18 of 22 Illinois Criminal Code of 1961 which punishes "Patronizing a
23 Prostitute," which specifically incorporates such an exception.
24 See also Section 796.06 of the Florida Criminal Code which states
25 "The term 'prostitution' as used in paragraph (a) shall be 26 construed so as to exclude sexual intercourse between a husband
27 and his wife."

28          39/ For a related factual situation, see the unpublished

1 appellate opinion of Fournier v. Lopez, California Court of
2 Appeal, First District, Division Four, Case No. 1 Civ. 43979,
3 filed May 2, 1979. Ms. Fournier requested Mr. Lopez to engage in 4 sexual relations with her so that she might have a baby. He
5 agreed, on condition that he would not be liable to her for child
6 support. Ms. Fournier accepted the terms of the agreement and she 7 had the baby. Later she changed her mind and sued for support on 8 the grounds that the agreement was for prostitution and hence
9 unenforceable. If the results of this case were carried to the 10 extreme, Lopez could have been prosecuted for a violation of 11 647(b). Section 647(b) does not distinguish between procreational 12 sex for money or other consideration, on the one hand, and 13 recreational sex for a fee.

14 <sup>40/</sup> See Coleman, "Enforcement of Section 647(b) of the 15 California Penal Code by the Los Angeles Police Department." In 16 this study it was noted that an arrest was made of a young woman
17 by an undercover vice officer when she offered to provide sexual 18 services to him if he would give her a ride home. Since the ride 19 home was the consideration for the offered sexual relations, the 20 officer felt justified in arresting her for soliciting in 21 violation of Section 647(b).

22 <sup>41/</sup> See, for example People v. Gibson, 521 P.2d 774 (1974)
23 in which the Supreme Court of Colorado refused to save a statute
24 from being struck down as unconstitutional by giving it a
25 constitutional interpretation on the ground that a constitutional
26 interpretation would render it inconsistent with other statutes.

27 <sup>42/</sup> In re P., 400 N.Y.S.2d 445 (1977) at 468-469.

28 <sup>43/</sup> Ibid., p. 469. This case was subsequently reversed on

1 appeal, but on issues unconnected with the points discussed here.
2 See In re Dora P., 418 N.Y.S.2d 597 (1979).
3 44/ See Sherry, "Vagrants, Rogues and Vagabonds -- Old
4 Concepts in Need of Revision" (1960) Cal.L. Rev. 557, 562.
5 45/ Id, at 567.
6 46/ Id, at 568
7 47/ Id, at 570
8 48/ id, at 566
9 49/ Report of Assembly Interim Committee of Criminal
10 Procedure, vol. 2, App. to Journal of Assem. Reg. Sess. 1961, pp.
11 12-13; also see Leffell v. Municipal court (1976) 54 Cal.App.3d
12 569, 573.
13 50/ Leffel, supra, at 576.
14 51/ Id, at 576.
15 52/ See 1965 Code Legislation, Continuing Education of the 16 Bar, at p. 182.
17 53/ California Statutes, 1975, chapter 71, section 10 and
18 chapter 877, section 2.
19 54/ Alaska, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware,
20 Hawaii, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Maine, Nebraska, New Hampshire, 21 New Jersey, New Mexico, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, South Dakota, 22 Washington, West Virginia, Wyoming, Vermont.
23 55/ Warren and Brandeis, "The Right to Privacy," 4 Harv.
24 L.Rev. 193 (1890).
25 56/ H. R. Rodgers, "A New Era for Privacy," 43 N.D.L.Rev.
26 253 (1967).
27 57/ Boyd v. United States (1886) 116 U.S. 616, 630.
28 58/ Reversed on procedural grounds only.

1           59/ Doe v. Commonwealth (1976) 96 S.Ct. 1488-1490.
2           60/ Carey, at footnote 17.
3           61/ State v. Elliot (N.M. 1976) 551 P.2d 1352.
4           62/ People v. Rice & Mehr (N.Y., 1977) 363 N.E.2d 1371.
5           63/ State v. Ciuffini, App.Div. Super. Ct., Case No.
6 A-1775-76, decided December 6, 1978.
7           64/ Prosser, Torts (4th Ed.) Section 117, pp. 804-814.
8           65/ City of Carmel-by-the-Sea v. Young (1970) 2 Cal.3d 259, 9 268.
10          66/ White v. Davis (1975) 13 Cal.3d 757, 774. The Supreme 11 Court in White acknowledged the propriety of judicial resort to 12 such ballot arguments as an aid in construing such amendments.
13 White, 775, at footnote 11.
14          67/ Ibid, at p. 773.
15          68/ California Voter's Pamphlet, p. 28 (1972).
16          69/ Porter v. University of San Francisco (197__ ) 64
17 Cal.App.3d 825, 829.
18          70/ People v. Triggs (1973) 8 Cal.3d 884, 891.
19          71/ Ibid, at p. 892, footnote 5.
20          72/ People v. Cahan (1955) 44 Cal.2d 434, 438.
21          73/ California Statutes, 1975, chapter 71, section 10 &
22 chapter 877, section 2.
23          74/ One was an inconsistency with subdivision (a) of Section
24 647 of the Penal Code which prohibited soliciting a lewd act. The 25 other is with subdivision (b) of the same section which prohibits
26 engaging in a lewd act for money or other consideration.
27          75/ The full text of the executive order, issued by Governor
28 Brown on April 4, 1979, reads:

1           WHEREAS, Article I of the California Constitution
2 guarantees the inalienable right of privacy for all
3 people which must be vigorously enforced; and

4           WHEREAS, government must not single out sexual 5 minorities for harassment or recognize sexual 6 orientation as a basis for discrimination; and

7           WHEREAS, California must expand its investment in 8 human capital by enlisting the talent of all members of 9 society;

10           NOW, THEREFORE, I, Edmund G. Brown Jr., Governor of 11 the State of California, by virtue of the power of and 12 authority vested in me by the Constitution and statutes
13 of the State of California, do hereby issue this order
14 to become effective immediately:

15           The agencies, departments, boards and commissions
16 within the Executive Branch of state government under 17 the jurisdiction of the Governor shall not discriminate
18 in state employment against any individual based solely 19 upon the individual's sexual preference. Any alleged 20 acts of discrimination in violation of this directive
21 shall be reported to the State Personnel Board for 22 resolution.

23           <sup>76/</sup> People v. Mesa (1968) 265 Cal.App.2d 746 and People v.
24 Dudley (1967) 250 Cal.App.2d Supp. 955.

25           <sup>77/</sup> Barbara M. Roberts, M.S.W., The Use of Surrogate
26 Partners in Sex Therapy (1979). Ms. Roberts is Director of the 27 Center for Social and Sensory Learning in Los Angeles. She is a 28 California state licensed therapist. The Center specializes in

1 sex therapy for couples, and single men and women, with emphasis
2 upon the development of intimacy as part of the treatment for 3 sexual problems.

4 78/ Id at 8.

5 79/ Id.

6 80/ Id at 4.

7 81/ Id at 7.

8 82/ Interview with Ms. Barbara M. Roberts, Playgirl
9 Magazine, March, 1977.

10 83/ D. Leroy, The Potential Liability of Human Sex Clinics
11 and Their Patients, 16 St. Louis Law Journal 586, 600 (1972).

12 84/ Id.

13 85/ Id at 591.

14 86/ Id.

15 87/ W. Masters and V. Johnson, Human Sexual Inadequacy, 16 147-148 (1970).

17 88/ D. Leroy, supra note 7.

18 89/ B. Roberts, supra note 1.

19 90/ Id.

20 91/ See, e.g., N.Y. Penal Law Sec. 230.00 (McKinney 1967).

21 92/ G. Mueller, The Legal Regulation of Sexual Conduct, 22 112-120 (1961).

23 93/ D. Leroy, supra note 7.

24 94/ George, Legal, Medical and Psychiatric Considerations in 25 the Control of Prostitution, 60 Mich.L.Rev. 717, 718 (1961). It
26 should again be noted that the California statute takes into 27 account only the act, not the motivation. See People v. Fixler
28 (1976) 56 Cal.App.3d 321.

1           95/ D. Leroy, supra note 7 at 600.
2           96/ Jennifer James, Ph.D., and E. Joseph Jr., Esq.,
3 "Prostitution in Seattle," Washington State Bar News (Aug.-Sept.
4 1971), at 8; accord: Harry Benjamin, M.D., and R. E. L. Masters,
5 Prostitution and Morality, (1964); Winick and Kinsie, The Lively
6 Commerce, (1972).
7           97/ Jennings, "The Victim as Criminal: A Consideration of 8 California's Prostitution Law," 64 Cal.L.Rev. 1235, 1242-1250
9 (1976); Rosenbleet and Pariente, "The Prostitution of the Criminal
10 Law," 11 American Criminal Law Rev. 373, 416-421 (1973).
11           98/ "Coercion to Virtue: The Enforcement of Morals," 41
12 So. Cal. L. Rev. 588, 599 (1968).
13           99/ "Prostitution and Veneral Disease," 13 Internat'l.L.Rev.
14 of Crim. Policy 67, 69, October 1958.
15           100/ Jennifer James, Ph.D., and E. Joseph Burnstin, Jr., 16 Esq., "Prostitution in Seattle," Washington State Bar News
17 (August-September 1971), at 8.
18           101/ "Prostitution in Seattle," supra, at 8.
19           102/ Dr. William Edwards, Jr., statement in the Honolulu
20 Star-Bulletin, March 23, 1972, p.B-8.
21           103/ "Should Prostitution Be Legalized?" Sexual Behavior,
22 January 1972, at 72.
23           104/ Department of Health, Education and Welfare, Public
24 Health Service, June 1, 1972; per J. D. Millar, M.D., Chief,
25 Veneral Disease Branch, Center for Disease Control, Atlanta,
26 Georgia.
27           105/ "Prostitution in Seattle," supra, at 8.
28           106/ Newsweek, January 24, 1972, at 46.

1           107/ "Prostitution in Seattle," supra, at 8.

2           108/ See, e.g., Harry Benjamin, M.D., and R.E.L. Masters,
3 Prostitution and Morality, (1964); Winick and Kinsie, The Lively
4 Commerce, (1972).

5           109/ Newsweek, January 24, 1972, at 46.

6           110/ The progress of medical research in the development of 7 prophylactic drugs for venereal disease deserves at least passing
8 comment here. While some degree of effective venereal disease 9 prophylaxis can be achieved by regular weekly injections of 10 penicillin, as has been done for some years now in certain foreign 11 countries which medically regulate prostitutes (see, e.g., 13 12 International Review of Criminal Policy, supra), recent 13 A.S.H.A.-sponsored experiments in Nevada testing a new compound,
14 Progonasyl, have had extremely optimistic results. Prophylactic
15 use of the drug (which is also an effective contraceptive) by 16 prostitutes in the State-licensed houses of prostitution resulted 17 in a "significant reduction" of the venereal disease rates,
18 especially for gonorrhea, by far the more common disease. ("A 19 Study of Progonasyl Using Prostitutes in Nevada's Legal Houses of 20 Prostitution," W. M. Edwards, M.D., Chief, Bureau of Preventive
21 Medicine, Nevada State Health Division, and Richard S. Fox, April 22 13, 1972.)

23           Thus, whatever state interest may be said to reside in 24 controlling prostitution for the purpose of diminishing venereal
25 disease may soon be eliminated.

26           111/ "The consensus of opinion in this matter seems to have 27 been best stated by Flexner in 1914 who said (in his classic work
28 Prostitution in Europe that the treating of venereal disease is a

1 health matter falling outside the ambit of the police and can best
2 be served by adequate health facilities and an intensive program
3 of public education." The Correctional Association of New York,
4 "Governmental Attitude and Action Toward Prostitution," (November
5 1967), at 6.

6 112/ "Presidential Commission on Law Enforcement and the 7 Administration of Justice, Task Force Report: Organized Crime,"
8 p. 4 (1967); cited in The Challenge of Crime in a Free Society, 9 189 (1967).

10 113/ "Should Prostitution Be Legalized?" Sexual Behavior,
11 supra, at 72.

12 114/ T. C. Esselstyn, "Prostitution in the United States,"
13 376 Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science
14 123 (March 1968), at 127.

15 115/ 5 Washingtonian (August, 1970) at 43.

16 116/ "The San Francisco Committee on Crime: A Report on 17 Non-Victim Crime in San Francisco," Moses Laski and William H.
18 Orrick, Jr., Chairman, (June 3, 1971) at 32.

19 117/ "Prostitution," Contemporary Social Problems, (New York,
20 1961) at 262.

21 118/ A major study of prostitutes in Seattle during 1970-71,
22 using statistically valid sampling techniques, revealed that more 23 than seventy-six percent (76.1%) of all female prostitutes were 24 injured while working; sixty-four percent (64%) of these by 25 customers, twenty percent (20%) by police, and sixteen percent
26 (16%) by pimps. Dr. Jennifer James, "A formal Analysis of 27 Prostitution in Seattle: Final Report," Part I-B (Department of 28 Psychiatry, School of Medicine, University of Washington, 1971).

